FROM PAUL HUTCHEON at Holyrood

THE new King paid an emotional tribute to his mother Queen Elizabeth at the Scottish Parliament as thousands gathered in the Royal Mile yesterday to say farewell.

Charles III, who later staged a vigil over the Queen's coffin at St Giles' Cathedral, quoted Scotland's Bard Robert Burns, telling MSPs she had been a "friend of truth" who saw Scotland as "home".

First Minister Nicola Sturgeon also hailed the Queen, who passed away at Balmoral last Thursday after 70 years on the throne, as the "anchor" of the nation.

In a historic first address at Holyrood, King Charles said: "I know that the Scottish Parliament and the people of Scotland share with me a profound sense of grief at the death of my beloved mother.

"Through all the years of her reign, the Queen like so many generations of our family before her, found in the hills of this land and in the hearts of its people, a haven and a home."

Quoting Epitaph On My Own Friend, he said: "My dear mother was a friend of man, a friend of truth, a friend of age and guide of youth.

"Few hearts like hers, with virtue warmed, few heads with knowledge so informed."

He went on to say: "While still very young, the Queen pledged herself to serve her country and her people and to maintain the principles of constitutional government.

"As we now mark with gratitude a promise most faithfully fulfilled, I am determined with God's help and with yours to follow that inspiring example."

The King said his other Scots titles including Duke of Rothesay now passed to his son William.

He said: "I take up my new duties with thankfulness for all that Scotland has given me. With resolve to seek always the welfare of our country and its people and with wholehearted trust in your goodwill and good counsel as we take forward that task together."

Sturgeon tabled a motion of condolence and described the late monarch in her speech as the "anchor of our nation".

"In an ever-changing and often turbulent world, Her Majesty has been our constant," the First Minister said.

She then turned her attention to King Charles, telling MSPs: "Your Majesty, we stand ready to support you, as you continue your own life of service – and as you build on the extraordinary legacy of your beloved mother, our Queen.

"Queen Elizabeth, Queen of Scots – we are grateful for her life. May she now rest in peace."

On a day of high emotion, the King and his Consort Queen Camilla stepped off the plane at a blustery but bright Edinburgh.

Their aircraft landed just before 12.30pm, having taken off from RAF Northolt in London.

The Sovereign was met by Sturgeon and the Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh Robert Aldridge.

In mid-afternoon, the King led a procession behind the Queen's coffin as it was taken from Holyroodhouse to St Giles' Cathedral.

A cortege moved slowly up the Royal Mile, with thousands of well-wishers lining the route, Charles was joined by the Princess Royal, Earl of Wessex and Duke of York as they followed the hearse carrying the Queen's oak coffin.

A service of prayer and reflection was then held for the Queen's life, after which the new King held private meetings with Sturgeon and Presiding Officer Alison Johnstone at Holyroodhouse. The King then addressed the Parliament after listening to party leaders speak to a motion of condolence.

Scottish Labour leader Anas Sarwar told MSPs: "Queen Elizabeth II was a constant reminder of the need for kindness and compassion in our society. She was the great unifier of our country.

"She brought joy at times of national pride. She brought comfort at times of national tragedy. She brought light during our nation's darkest moments."

Scottish Tory leader Douglas Ross echoed that, saying: "The Queen seemed as permanent as the stones of Edinburgh Castle. A constant while her "country has changed around her.

"Time and time again Her Majesty gave us certainty, stability, joy and happiness when we needed it most."

Scottish Liberal Democrat leader Alex Cole-Hamilton said: "She always kept a special place for Scotland in her heart, as she in turn found ample room in ours.

"Her passing leaves a profound absence across our family of nations and these islands are united in our grief.

"Her Majesty came of age in the crucible of war, a period of gravest danger for our country."

After the King left the chamber, he attended a reception in the Parliament and then went on to the Main Hall to meet young people.

He then made his way back to St Giles' Cathedral for a vigil at Queen Elizabeth's coffin, where thousands queued up to file past and pay their respects.

Silence on our streets

THE nation will hold a minute's silence at 8pm on Sunday to mourn the Queen and reflect on her life and legacy.

People are invited to mark her privately at home, on their doorstep or street, or at events and vigils, No 10 said, while those living abroad are encouraged to take part at 8pm their time.

The PM's official spokesman said: "The shared national moment of reflection is an opportunity for everyone... to mark the death of Her Majesty."

Shops shut for funeral

SUPERMARKET chains and high street stores will shut on Monday due to the Queen's funeral.

Sainsbury's and Aldi have become the latest retailers to tell shoppers they will be shut on the day, which is now a bank holiday to mark the Queen's state funeral.

Primark and John Lewis also confirmed closure plans.

Sainsbury's will shut supermarkets and Argos shops but will keep convenience stores and petrol filling stations open during the evening

King 'stays after indy'

JOHN Swinney has confirmed King Charles III will be the head of state if Scotland voted for independence.

The Deputy First Minister was asked about the SNP's position on the monarchy ahead of Charles's first visit as King to Holyrood.

Swinney told BBC Radio 4: "His Majesty the King should be the head of state of an independent Scotland. it's what we argued in the referendum in 2014, and it's what we will continue to argue."

Andrew heckler is arrested

THE Duke of York was heckled by a protester as he followed the Queen's coffin.

Prince Andrew was in his suit after being banned from wearing his military uniform following the Jeffrey Epstein scandal.

A young man was filmed shouting: "Andrew, you're a sick old man." as the duke, 62, marched behind his mother's funeral cortege on Edinburgh's Royal Mile.

A short scuffle ensued before the officer led a man away as he shouted "disgusting" and "I've done nothing wrong".

Police Scotland later confirmed a 22-year-old had been arrested "in connection with a breach of the peace on the Royal Mile".

Prince Andrew, a Falklands War veteran, was not allowed to wear military dress like his siblings for the funeral, and instead wore a morning suit. The prince will have to appear in civilian clothes at almost all the other public events to mourn his mother.

It is understood the one exception will be the final vigil for the Queen in Westminster Hall.

Andrew will wear a uniform as a "special mark of respect" for the Queen when he stands guard around her coffin during the Vigil of the Princes.

He gave up his HRH status and was stripped of all his honorary military roles over his friendship with Epstein. The move came after allegations were made by one of paedophile Epstein's "sex slaves" Virginia Roberts.

She claimed Andrew sexually abused her when she was a minor under US law. He denies the claims.

Those claims culminated in a US lawsuit and a multi-million-pound out of court settlement with no admission of liability.

TENS of thousands crammed the streets of Edinburgh yesterday to witness history in the making as King Charles III accompanied the Queen's coffin on an emotional journey up the Royal Mile.

The Queen's cortege travelled slowly from Holyrood Palace to St Giles' Cathedral with crowds of well-wishers lining the route to say goodbye.

Charles was joined by Princess Anne, Prince Andrew and Prince Edward as they followed the black hearse carrying the Queen's oak coffin.

After a service in the city's High Kirk, mourners who had queued for hours were allowed in to pay their respects as the monarch lay in state.

Some had taken up position at the front of the metal barriers as early as 9am, with several bringing chairs.

Hundreds could be seen in the distance atop a cliff face on Arthur's Seat to enjoy a view high above proceedings.

A sea of hands carrying mobile phones filled the air to record the historic moment as the royal hearse, flanked by the Royal Company of Archers, the King's bodyguard in Scotland, emerged through the palace gates. The Queen's coffin was draped with the Royal Standard in Scotland and dressed with a wreath of flowers.

Looking straight ahead, The King was expressionless as he led the Royal family on foot while the Queen Consort, Camilla, and the Countess of Wessex followed in a car.

There was near-silence for much of the stately march up the part-cobbled roadway, punctuated in the distance by the firing of a cannon each minute at Edinburgh Castle.

Many onlookers were just feet away from the cortege as it passed on the narrow street.

Security was tight, with police marksmen stationed on the roofs of several buildings. The coffin was taken into St Giles' for a service celebrating Queen Elizabeth II's life, with guests including First Minister Nicola Sturgeon.

The crowd listened outside as hymns could be heard before a closing rendition of God Save the King.

The Royal Family left the cathedral – more than halfway between Edinburgh Castle and Holyrood Palace – at 4.15pm to further applause.

Police finally raised the security barriers allowing pedestrians to move freely around 4.30pm, generating a cry of approval from those gathered and more clapping.

Officers had shut off side streets leading to the Royal Mile, forcing many into extensive detours to reach the procession area.

Linda Thorburn, 69, came through from Giffnock, near Glasgow, to watch the proceedings. Her daughter Pamela, 36, cancelled her flight back home to Rotterdam so she could attend.

Mum-of-two Linda, a retired company director, said: "We just had to be here to pay our respects to the Queen and see the new King.

We got here early to make sure we had a good viewpoint but still had to stand on police cones to see because there were so many people.

"It was a sad occasion but people also seemed so happy to be together for the right reasons.

We were down at Holyrood Palace when King Charles arrived and he gave us a wave, which was wonderful."

Pamela, a personal trainer, said: "I moved my flight to Tuesday so I could be part of it.

"I loved the Queen and felt I needed to be here. I wanted to witness history and be part of the atmosphere."

Mags Sharkey, 66, travelled from Glasgow with her friend Yvonne Stewart, 52, from Lanarkshire.

Mags said: "We've come up here for this because we'll probably never see this again. I've got three grandchildren in the US, who love Scotland, so I've come to take some pictures to send to them.

"It's a good story for them – that their grandma was here. It's a piece of history too."

Stacey Zara McLaren, 36, from East Lothian, waited for four hours to witness events.

She said: "We're here to see everything that's happening and pay our respects to the Queen because she embodies everything that I've looked up to and she just reminds me of my gran.

"She's somebody that's been there our whole life and for the realisation that somebody isn't going to be there any more, it just hits you. I'm quite excited to see the King. It's a new era."

Georgia Ramage, nine, added: "I felt really really sad when the Queen died because I was really lucky to have a queen because there isn't going to be another one for a long time now."

Pam and Callum MacDonald, from Edinburgh, were joined by their dog Dylan among the crowds. Callum said: "It's a historic moment. She's been there our entire lives and for most of our parents' lives as well.

"It's a new beginning with the new King but he's got a lot to live up to."

Pam added: "It's still pretty unbelievable because she's always been there."

It brought back childhood memories for Elizabeth Dodds, 80, who is originally from Portlethen in Kincardineshire and now lives in Nottingham.

She said: "I remember her coronation, I was about 10. I danced on the back of a float on a very cold, wet day in the village of Portlethen.

"We didn't have a television, so we went to see the coronation eventually at the new cinema in Aberdeen."

The Queen's coffin will lie in St Giles' Cathedral for 24 hours to allow members of the public to come and pay their respects.

Earlier King Charles and Queen Camilla arrived at Holyrood Palace after flying into Edinburgh Airport. He spent time outside the palace shaking hands and receiving bouquets of flowers.

Before leaving for St Giles', the King took part in the Ceremony of the Keys, where he was presented with the keys to the city by the Lord Provost Robert Aldridge.

As tradition dictates, he handed them back during the ceremony to entrust their safekeeping with the capital's officials.

The King also inspected a guard of honour from the Royal Regiment of Scotland.

The first people to view the late Queen's coffin at St Giles' Cathedral spoke movingly about their experience.

Karen Whitehouse left her home in Loweswater, Cumbria, at 2am yesterday to start queuing to pay her respects to the late monarch in Edinburgh.

Speaking about her moment with the royal coffin the 64-year-old said: "It was surreal. It was very quiet, everyone was very still. It was like they were all statues.

"I can't believe I've done it and I was that close.

"I paid my respects, it was just beautiful."

Karen said the Queen's coffin was lying on a tall plinth inside the cathedral. She added: "It's a beautiful experience. It was worth the 12 hours to get here."

THANK QUEUE

Thousands line up for hour after hour to get a chance to say a last goodbye to a monarch with abiding love for Scotland

RESPECT Julie in the queue and, above, passing the coffin

FROM JULIE McCAFFREY at St Giles' Cathedral

THOUSANDS of people queued for several hours – many into the night – to get their chance to say goodbye to the Queen in person.

The line stretched around the city for two miles, zigzagging across the Meadows, past Edinburgh University, around the National Museum of Scotland to St Giles' Cathedral.

Those who passed through security and finally made it inside the historic building were met with the sounds of the shuffle of slow footsteps, broken by sniffles and deep breaths from stifled emotions.

They paused near the oak coffin, where the Crown of Scotland is placed, with heads bowed and hands clasped.

Some made the sign of the Cross. Others give a small, respectful bow.

I was among the first 30 members of the public to file past the Queen's coffin lying in rest in Edinburgh.

I tightly squeezed a tissue in my pocket to try to keep my feelings in check, just like all those around me.

It felt strangely personal to be so close at such a poignant time for the nation, because despite the world's cameras outside, just for a moment it felt as if it was just she and I.

When the nation has felt chaotic, the Queen represented calm, continuity and common sense.

Her life was one of duty and now it's our duty to thank her one last time.

I have reported on her visits to several towns, seen the faces of the most cynical people light up just setting eyes on her.

I've been to the Braemar Gathering near Balmoral numerous times, and felt the buzz ripple through the crowd when she took her seat to watch the Highland dancers and children's sack race.

This evening her coffin will head south to London. But for now, for Scots like me, she still belongs to us.

But now we must accept our Queen's historic reign is over. The thought made my eyes well and rendered me unable to speak for a few minutes after I left the cathedral.

I left home 30 miles away at 5.30am to make sure I was given one of the 64,000 wristbands handed to the first who queued.

I'd left it late compared with Veronica Alsleben, 72, who arrived from her home in Alnmouth, Northumberland, at midnight and slept on a bench in the Meadows until the queue opened.

In the 12 hours since we became queue friends, Veronica kept everyone chipper. But now, next to the coffin, she quietly dissolved into tears.

Outside, Veronica squeezed my arm and said: "Paying my respects to the Queen just now was the most privileged and important moment of my life."

The King, Princess Anne – the first female royal to take part in a vigil since the tradition began with George V – Prince Andrew and Prince Edward took a station on the four sides of the coffin.

Earlier Prime Minister Liz Truss and First Minister Nicola Sturgeon had joined the King at a service of thanksgiving for the Queen in the cathedral.

Sunlight streamed through the stained glass windows as eight kilted soldiers from the Royal Regiment of Scotland carried her coffin with care on to a decorated wooden frame.

The King, the Queen Consort and other members of the Royal Family walked to their seats, less than 10ft from the coffin.

It was dressed in the Royal Standard of Scotland and topped with a wreath of roses, freesias, chrysanthemums, thistles and dried white heather from the Balmoral estate.

Opening the service, Rev Calum MacLeod reminded the congregation who came from different sections of society including her staff, the emergency services, Armed Forces and politics, of the great history of the cathedral, first built 900 years ago.

He said: "We gather to bid Scotland's farewell to our late monarch, whose life of service to the nation and the world we celebrate and whose love for Scotland was legendary."

In his homily, Kirk Moderator Rt Rev Dr Iain Greenshields said: "Much has been said about the Queen's contribution to the life of the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth which meant so much to her.

"But here in Scotland we acknowledge with gratitude her deep links with our land and its people."

Among those who queued up to file past the Queen's coffin was Stacey Layzell, 43, who is from the Highlands but lives in Newcastle, said: "I'm in so much shock after seeing that. To see her coffin was the most heartbreaking thing.

"We'll never see anything like that in our lives again.

"I started queuing to go in at 6.30am but I would have stayed there for days to get that kind of opportunity to thank her and pay my respects."

Rodney Matthews, 84, a retired baptist minister, was awarded an MBE in the Millenium honours list and met the Queen on three occasions. He said: "The Queen was so gracious to me and I wanted to thank her.

"She was such a lovely, relaxed lady who put you at ease each time you met her.

"Once you got through security, there was a wonderful sense of feeling as if you were on your own in the cathedral to see the coffin."

Will Lynch, 50, wife Deborah, 49, and daughter Faye, 11, came from Milngavie, near Glasgow.

Will, a retired Army colonel with the Royal Artillery, said: "As an ex-servicemen you give your oath to Queen and country.

"To us it felt more appropriate to pay our respects while Her Majesty was lying in state. It felt more personal."

Deborah said: "I felt more emotional than I expected. It was tranquil, peaceful and respectful."

George Higgins, a Royal Scots veteran, knocked off from night shift as a university security guard at 5am and came straight out to wait for 11 hours to see the Queen's coffin lying at rest.

George, 61, from Edinburgh, said: "I'm going back to work for my next night shift. I can sleep another day. My small sacrifice is nothing compared to the Queen's 70 years."

PRIME POSITION Truss had Jack on one side and Sturgeon on the other

Humble service was tweed skirt of royal funerals

BY ANNA BURNSIDE AT ST GILES' CATHEDRAL

THE Queen loved Scotland – yesterday the country showed that the feeling is mutual.

Scotland said its formal goodbyes with a sombre service at St Giles' Cathedral following an emotional procession up the historic Royal Mile.

It all made for a very Scottish event, less flashy and ornate than the planned ceremony at Westminster Abbey. It was the difference between the Queen relaxing at Balmoral in her tweed skirt and comfy cardigan and the monarch with the hat and handbag on official duties.

And holding this service of remembrance in Edinburgh brought Scotland into the centre of the national events to mark the end of the Elizabethan era.

Inside St Giles', the pomp and circumstance was kept to a minimum. There was one floral arrangement, a pyramid of white lilies and roses.

Guests could choose their own seats. Past first ministers mixed with the current generation from Holyrood. Alex Salmond sat down beside Jack McConnell – then immediately turned his back to chat to someone else.

The new Prime Minister, Liz Truss, arrived late and gravitated towards her Scottish Secretary of State, fellow Tory Alister Jack.

In a cathedral filled with 200-odd representatives of Scottish civic society, from Police Scotland to the Scottish Football Association, she must have been one of the few there who hardly knew a soul.

The ceremony, which started 15 minutes late, was cleverly constructed to tick Scottish boxes. In the half hour before the coffin arrived, there was music from the organist and choir. As well as Bach and Purcell, there was Scottish composers James MacMillan, Savourna Stevenson and Sir Peter Maxwell Davies.

The minister of St Giles' Cathedral, Reverend Calum MacLeod, led the service with contributions from senior clerics from the Catholic church and the Episcopal Church, a senior elder of the Church of Scotland and a Commonwealth student from Nigeria.

As well as sacred music sung by the choir, some of it in Latin, Karen Matheson sang a Gaelic psalm, accompanied by a clairsach.

Nicola Sturgeon in a black hat did the first reading. She was solemn and clear. If you wanted to find a political subtext in the verses from Ecclesiastes, you could. "A time to keep, a time to throw away; a time to tear, and a time to sew."

But this was not the kind of gathering where republicans boo and produce placards, so there was none of that.

Everything about this service was on a human scale. The 13th-century cathedral, with its stained glass windows and heraldic banners, is clearly a grand and important building. But it's nothing like the intimidatingly vast Westminster Abbey.

Even the Scottish crown, laid on the Queen's coffin by the Duke of Hamilton, is modest compared with the jewels from the Tower of London.

The Royal Company of Archers, the monarch's official bodyguards in Scotland, have great presence in their bottle-green tunics and feathered hats. But they are a charming relic of the past. There were also real bodyguards, with bulging muscles and earpieces, discretely scattered among the guests.

As the service ended with God Save the King, thousands were lining up nearby to pay their respects at St Giles'. The coffin is set to remain in the capital for almost 24 hours after the service's end.

But this is not classed as "lying in state". Instead, the Queen is "laying at rest", to allow Scots who have queued for a wristband to file past her mortal remains.

The great and the good have had their shot. Now it's their turn to say goodbye.

PRINCE Harry paid an emotional tribute to the Queen, calling her a "guiding compass" and saying she is "together in peace" with husband Prince Philip.

The Duke of Sussex, who delayed making a statement on Her Majesty's passing out of respect for the anniversary of the September 11 terror attacks, also said he wanted to honour his estranged father at the start of his reign as King.

1988 Harry with Queen and Wills

In his message, Harry referred to his "darling wife" Meghan and said he was grateful that the Queen had hugged her "beloved great-grandchildren" – Archie, three, and Lilibet, one – and said he "cherished" time spent with her.

Harry said: "In celebrating the life of my grandmother, Her Majesty The Queen – and in mourning her loss – we are all reminded of the guiding compass she was to so many in her commitment to service and duty. She was globally admired and respected.

"Her unwavering grace and dignity remained true throughout her life and now her everlasting legacy."

Harry's statement came two days after the Prince and Princess of Wales put on a united front with the Duke and Duchess of Sussex as they joined forces on a walkabout at Windsor Castle on Saturday, although royal sources described the meeting as a "temporary truce".

But in previous days Harry has appeared completely estranged from his family, choosing to leave Balmoral just 12 hours after arriving, following a desperate attempt to be by the Queen's bedside in her final hours.

An unknown delay resulted in him travelling separately from other royals, including his brother William.

The crestfallen Duke then arrived more than four hours after Her Majesty passed away peacefully at her Scottish estate.

Referencing the Queen's own words after the death last year of the Duke of Edinburgh, her husband of 73 years, Harry yesterday said: "Let us echo the words she spoke after the passing of her husband, Prince Philip, words which can bring comfort to all of us now: 'Life, of course, consists of final partings as well as first meetings'."

He added: "Granny, while this final parting brings us great sadness, I am forever grateful for all of our first PAIN etched across his face, crestfallen Harry knew he was too late to say his last goodbyes.

After years of damaging disputes with his family, his grandmother remained his biggest ally.

Following the tragic death of his mother, she was his most steadfast and guiding force, refusing to bow to a nation's grief and return to London until she felt they were ready. Harry knew he could always rely on her support despite deciding to leave his royal role behind and set up a new life in America with his wife and children.

Even though he neglected to tell Her Majesty of his plan to announce his meetings – from my earliest childhood memories with you, to meeting you for the first time as my Commander-in-Chief, to the first moment you met my darling wife and hugged your beloved great-grandchildren.

"I cherish these times shared with you, and the many other special moments in between. You are already sorely missed, not just by us, but by the world over.

"And as it comes to first meetings, we now honour my father in his new role as King Charles III.

"Thank you for your commitment to service. Thank you for your sound advice. Thank you for your infectious smile. We, too, smile knowing that you and grandpa are reunited now, and both together in peace."

Harry and Meghan, who now live in California after quitting their royal roles, decided over the weekend to stay in the UK until after Her Majesty's funeral, royal sources said.

The couple were last night exploring options to potentially have Meghan's mother, Doria Ragland, bring their two children over to Windsor after spending more than a week away from them.

Meanwhile, the Duchess of Sussex has paused the release of her Spotify podcast, Archetypes, for the duration of the mourning period.

Three full episodes of the audio series have been released since its launch on August 23, featuring conversations with veteran tennis player Serena Williams, pop star Mariah Carey and actress and producer Mindy Kaling.

Meghan and Harry signed a deal with the audio streaming giant to host and produce podcasts, estimated to be worth around £18million, in late 2020.

A message on Spotify said: "New episodes of Archetypes will be paused during the official mourning period for Her Majesty The Queen."

A period of "Royal Mourning" will continue until seven days after the Queen's funeral on Monday.

It will be observed by members of the Royal Family and Royal Household staff and its representatives on official duties, together with troops committed to ceremonial duties.

National Mourning continues until the end of the day of the funeral.

decision, before dropping a bombshell statement on social media, angering his family and the institution, the Queen's deep affection for him outweighed his descent.

Since he learned of the Queen's passing, perhaps he has experienced more than a moment of regret as to where he finds himself now. Even his brother William, so long his closest confidant and person he shared the deepest bond, cannot bear to think about letting him back into the fold.

Their truce last week ahead of the Queen's funeral is a mere sticking plaster to wounds that run deep.

In some way, perhaps her passing may lead Harry to choose a different path and seek resolution and unity with his family in her name.

QUEEN ELIZABETH II: 1926-

GRAND ENTRANCE Charles and Camilla enter ancient hall

MAJESTIC SETTING Politicians and troops

Monarch 'feels weight of

FROM BEN GLAZE at Westminster Hall

KING Charles III admitted feeling "the weight of history" during his first speech to MPs and peers at 900-year-old Westminster Hall yesterday.

Addressing both Houses of Parliament, he pointed to memorials of the late Queen in the ancient setting. The oldest part of the Palace of Westminster, it hosted King Charles I's trial and speeches by Nelson Mandela and Presidents Obama and De Gaulle. The Queen's father George VI was the first royal to address both Houses at the hall in 1945 while she last spoke at the venue 10 years ago.

Charles' speech was attended by 1200 guests including PM Liz Truss and Labour's Keir Starmer.

GUESTS Keir Starmer and Tory PM Liz Truss

The King listened as the Speakers of both houses offered their sympathies on the Queen's death and their best wishes to her successor.

Standing at the gilded lectern, he said: "I am deeply grateful for the addresses of condolence by the House of Lords and the House of Commons, which so touchingly encompass what our late Sovereign, my beloved mother, the Queen, meant to us all.

"As Shakespeare says of the earlier Queen Elizabeth, she was 'a pattern to all princes living'. As I stand before you today, I cannot help but feel the weight of history which surrounds us and which reminds us of the vital Parliamentary traditions to which Members of both Houses dedicate yourselves, with such personal commitment for the betterment of us all."

Tomorrow, the Queen's coffin will be carried into Westminster Hall where she made Silver, Golden and Diamond Jubilee addresses to both Houses. Yesterday her successor stood on the steps overlooking the vast stone floor where his mother's body will rest for four days of Lying in State.

Hundreds of MPs and peers filed into the building from 9am as the Band of the Household Cavalry played introductory music including Sir Edward Elgar's Ave Verum Corpus.

Fourteen members of the King's Body Guard of the Yeoman of the Guard – Britain's oldest military corps, formed in 1485 by Henry VII – processed through the North Door in pairs, eventually flanking steps leading towards Central Lobby. They were followed by nine members of the Honourable Corps of the Gentlemen at Arms – created by King Henry VIII in 1509 – with their brass helmets and white swan feather plumes, marching in single file.

They then stood behind the King and Queen Consort's red velvet thrones.

At 10.20am, four State Trumpeters from the Household Cavalry heralded the monarch's arrival.

After taking their seats, the royals sat for tributes from Lords Speaker Lord McFall and his Commons counterpart Sir Lindsay Hoyle. Lord McFall said: “We are proud and indeed humbled to welcome you as our King – and we look forward to welcoming you on many more occasions to Parliament, and to this hall in the years ahead.”

Sir Lindsay ushered in a murmur of gentle laughter and sparked a rueful smile from Camilla as he told guests of the Queen's visits to Parliament.

He said: “Our late Queen was here to mark the historic moments, such as the 50th anniversary of the Second World War, a war in which she herself served in the armed forces.And in 1988 we celebrated the 300th anniversary of the revolutions of 1688 to 1689.

“It is perhaps very British to celebrate revolutions by presenting an address to Her Majesty but those revolutions led to our constitutional freedoms, set out the foundation for a stable monarchy, which protects liberty.”

The 19-minute ceremony closed with the playing of the National Anthem, the rousing words God Save the King rising into the ancient roof.

Processing out, the monarch exchanged greetings with some of the audience seated on aisle-end of rows, who bowed and curtsied.

Exiting the Palace of Westminster, he climbed into a state limousine for the journey to RAF Northolt in West London. He then boarded a plane to Edinburgh to attend his mother's coffin at the Palace of Holyroodhouse.

RECORD VIEW

Majestic farewell to our ain Queen

THE Queen spent a lifetime in service to our nation and over the last few days Scotland can say it has done its final duty to the Queen.

From the moment six of the Balmoral estate gamekeepers lifted her coffin into the hearse on Sunday to the emotional service at St Giles' Cathedral in Edinburgh, the country has shown an outpouring of love and respect.

It was all done with the solemnity and dignity that on our best days we take as a mark of the Scottish nation.

The landscape, from Aberdeenshire to the Tay and down through Fife to our capital, shone for the world to see as she travelled through Scotland one final time.

Thousands of us waited patiently and lined the streets of our villages, towns and cities to pay our respects.

The St Giles' Cathedral service yesterday, and the procession of the Queen's coffin with the Royal Family from the Palace of Holyroodhouse, was both quietly dignified and a historic spectacle.

It was very much a day of Scottish ceremony and pageantry.

From the Gaelic psalm sung by Karen Matheson to the Scottish Crown resting on the Royal standard of Scotland draped over the coffin.

All of this reflected the Queen's love of Scotland and how she anchored herself here.

The restrained reverence of the crowds that lined the Royal Mile on Edinburgh, and the roads and the miles from Balmoral on Sunday, was breathtaking.

It matched the palpable sorrow felt by Scots and our affection for the Queen.

Some have commented on the silence that has accompanied the monarch on her final journey across our nation.

It is true that events in the following days in London may see more tears, more flower throwing and more vocal mourning.

But just because we do not weep and wail – it does not mean we do not feel her loss deeply.

Even the shouts of anti-monarchists have lent proceedings a distinctively Scottish character – as it is an obvious truth that there are many in this country who would wish that Elizabeth is the last of her line. But narrow politics has rarely featured as people across the political spectrum have spoken of their admiration for the Queen.

All of these events foreshadow a period of mourning which will take on a very different tone when the Queen's body leaves Scotland today by aircraft.

The full pomp of the British state will be on display then.

But we should all be grateful that we have had an opportunity to pay tribute in our own way to a monarch who loved this country so much.

On the streets of the capital and the roads from the glens to the mearns, it has been an honour for us to give the Queen of Scots a majestic, sincere and final farewell.

We'll not see her likes again.

CROWDS of thousands will turn out today as Queen Elizabeth II's coffin continues on its final journey from Edinburgh to London.

Her oak casket will land at RAF Northolt at 6.55pm after flying 400 miles from Edinburgh Airport.

And fans will line the streets for the 15-mile journey to Buckingham Palace, where Her Majesty will rest this evening as staff pay their respects.

At 2.22pm tomorrow, the coffin will be taken on a gun carriage of The King's Troop Royal Horse Artillery to the Palace of Westminster. Accompanied by the sound of minute guns fired from Hyde Park by The King's Troop Royal Horse Artillery, the cortege will make a trip past London landmarks.

It will travel via Queen's Gardens, The Mall, Horse Guards and Horse Guards Arch, Whitehall, Parliament Street, Parliament Square and New Palace Yard.

The Queen will lie in state until 6.30am on the day of her state funeral on Monday.

In just under five days, a million people are expected to visit Westminster Hall to pay their respects.

Queues could reach as long as five miles, while mourners are being warned to expect a wait of up to 30 hours. Culture Secretary Michelle Donelan used a WhatsApp message to MPs to reveal the latest estimates.

Formal details of the queue – which will be open for 24 hours a day – will only be made public at 10pm tonight. But some patriotic mourners dashed to London yesterday – more than two days before lines officially open at 5pm tomorrow.

"I respect her way of kindness, how she treats everyone equally, the religions and the communities. She sees everyone as equal.

"I really, really want to be part of it. I don't want to miss it in case they control the crowds if [the queue] gets too long."

Vanessa is planning to have her daughters bring warm clothes and glucose bars to keep her energy up during the wait.

Her Majesty will be accompanied by the Princess Royal and her husband, Vice Admiral Sir Tim Laurence, on her journey from Edinburgh airport tonight.

Her coffin will be conveyed on to an RAF C-17 by a bearer party, while The Royal Regiment of Scotland forms a guard of honour.

At RAF Northolt, The Queen's Colour Squadron will convey the coffin to the state hearse, where it will travel to the Palace via the A40, Eastbourne Terrace, Lancaster Gate, Bayswater Road, Marble Arch, Park Lane, Hyde Park Corner and Constitution Hill.

Transport bosses warn London will experience "unprecedented travel demand".

Tube stations will have to temporarily close to avoid overcrowding and passengers are urged to avoid Green Park.

Network Rail, Transport for London and the Rail Delivery Group said: "As Her Majesty's coffin travels to London to lie in state, it is expected that we will see unprecedented travel demand in the capital."

A service will run on the Elizabeth line between Paddington and Abbey Wood on Sunday to ease pressure on the network. That part of the line, opened by the Queen in May, is usually closed on Sundays.

Meanwhile, large numbers are expected in Belfast and Royal Hillsborough as the King and Queen Consort visit Northern Ireland today.

Slight rise in coronavirus in Scotland

CORONAVIRUS rates in Scotland have increased slightly after weeks of decline.

The Covid infection survey published by the Office for National Statistics estimates one in 50 people had the virus in the week to August 28.

The figures equate to 1.98 per cent of the population, or 104,400 people.

It is a slight increase from the week before, when an estimated one in 55 people had Covid-19.

In England and Wales, an estimate of one in 70 and one in 95 people respectively had the virus.

Working OAPs rise

The number of working pensioners has soared to a high of just under 1.47million, a record rise of 173,000 in the three months to the end of June.

AS HIS army continued to force the Russian army back, Ukraine's president Volodymyr Zelensky declared: "The world is amazed by our warriors, the enemy is in a panic."

As reports continued of Russian troops abandoning their positions he added: "They will call it a gesture of goodwill. We will call it victory."

The Ukrainian army has kept the counter-offensive momentum, saying it has liberated village after village and claiming that in one region it pushed the invaders back right up to the border.

"In some areas of the front, our defenders reached the state border with the Russian Federation," said the regional governor of the north-east Kharkiv region, Oleh Syniehubov.

After Sunday's attacks by Russia on power stations and other infrastructure that knocked out electricity in many places across Ukraine, Kyiv authorities also said electric power and water supplies have been restored to 80 per cent of the Kharkiv region. However, there were further missile strikes on Kharkiv again yesterday.

President Zelensky had a message for the Russian leader. He said: "Do you still think you can intimidate, break us, force us to make concessions?

"Did you really not understand anything? Don't understand who we are? What we stand for? What we are talking about?

"Read my lips, cold, hunger, darkness and thirst for us are not as scary and deadly as your 'friendship' and 'brotherhood.' We will be with gas, lights, water and food... and without you."

Ukraine's defence minister, Oleksii Reznikov, said the priority now was to secure the territorial gains made in a week of rapid advances in the Kharkiv region. There were reports that the Russian army had abandoned large quantities of equipment and ammunition as it withdrew, and there were also claims on social media that Russian troops had been looting as they pulled back to territory they still hold.

Vladimir Putin sacked another top ranking general after just 16 days in the role, reports said. Russia's president is said to have fired lieutenant general Roman Berdnikov.

There were also reports that municipal deputies from 18 districts of Moscow and St Petersburg signed a public statement demanding that Putin resign.

Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov said: "The military operation continues and it will continue until the goals that were originally set are achieved."

Lazenby in hot water over Bond 'sexist' talk

BY RECORD REPORTER

FORMER 007 George Lazenby has been axed from a live concert series of James Bond music after one show in which he reportedly boasted of his sexual conquests.

Some audience members had children with them and were horrified that the 83-year-old used his interview to talk about the women he had bedded.

It is not clear exactly what the Australian said, but he later apologised, saying: "It was never my intention to make hurtful or homophobic comments. I'm truly sorry if my stories that I've shared many times were taken that way."

A caller to a radio show who claimed to have been in the audience for the show in Perth, Australia, on Saturday night described his comments as "horrific".

The caller said: "He spent all of the interview talking basically about his sexual conquests, he swore, he certainly wasn't talking about his Bond movies, he downplayed the Queen."

Organiser Concertworks dropped Lazenby from the Melbourne leg of the tour.

Yesterday, Lazenby added: "I only ever wish to share stories and hopefully entertain some people.

"I personally have friends within my close circle who are gay and I would never wish to offend anyone.

"Having been surrounded by strong women all my life, I have always admired and respected women and their wishes."

Grange Hill's feisty head Bridget the Midget dies at 76

FOLLOW MY LEAD Actress Gwyneth Powell said women teachers told her she inspired them

PIONEER 'Bridget the Midget' in Grange Hill

GRANGE Hill star Gwyneth Powell has died aged 76 after complications following surgery, it was revealed last night.

Her agent Matthew Lacey said that the actress had died after complications following a major operation for a perforated colon.

He said she had "passed away peacefully" on Thursday with her husband Alan Leith and her niece by her bedside.

Powell, who lived in West Sussex, had a string of roles including Z Cars and Dixon of Dock Green before and after her 189 episodes of Grange Hil.

But it was as the tough-talking Bridget McCluskey that she became a household name in the 80s.

As the no-nonsense head of the London comprehensive, McCluskey ran Grange Hill for 11 years from 1981, earning herself the affectionate nickname "Bridget the Midget" from her students in the BBC series.

She once said: "It affected a whole generation and apart from the children, many women teachers have told me that my role encouraged them to apply for headships, which is great."

Born in Manchester, Powell went into rep theatre in 1969 after graduating from Goldsmiths College, London, where she had trained to be a teacher.

A decade ago Powell revealed she'd accepted the role of Mrs McCluskey after "pressure" from her nephew and nieces, who loved the programme.

The actress, who was 35 when she joined Grange Hill, also told how she'd been able to influence the character herself.

In 2008, she explained: "At first Mrs McCluskey was written as a 'twin set and pearls' role but I was quite young at the time and didn't want to play it like that."

SCOTTISH FIRST FOR SPRAY TO EASE SPASMS

CANNABIS DRUG APPROVED FOR MS SUFFERERS

Patients welcome groundbreaking treatment

BY VIVIENE AITKEN Health Editor

A CANNABIS-BASED drug has been approved for use for Scots patients with multiple sclerosis.

Sativex was given the nod by the Scottish Medicines Consortium yesterday and is the only medicine in the UK with a licence to treat muscle stiffness and spasms (spasticity) from MS.

The drug contains two chemicals from the cannabis plant called cannabinoids – tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) and cannabidiol (CBD) – and is used as a mouth spray to treat moderate to severe spasticity in MS when other medicines haven't worked.

One woman, who has battled the symptoms of MS since she was 13, breathed a sigh of relief when she heard the new drug was approved.

Lillias Rapson, 38, from Thurso, Caithness, was diagnosed with relapsing remitting MS 10 years ago but had symptoms since she was a teenager.

She has been using Sativex since 2018 after initially being given it reluctantly by her neurologist for a trial. However, she was concerned her prescription would be stopped if the SMC did not approve the drug.

Lillias said: "It's a real worry removed from my mind, knowing I can keep my muscle spasms – and therefore my pain levels down and under control – while maintaining my functionality as much as possible and without using addictive opioids. It feels wonderful knowing others with MS will be able to easily access Sativex on the NHS in Scotland from now on. No one should have to live a life struggling to manage muscle spasms and pain."

Sativex was already approved for use on the NHS in England, Wales and Northern Ireland but a limited number of people were able to access it via the Peer Approved Clinical System (PACS) Tier 2 individual patient treatment request process.

More than 15,000 people in Scotland live with MS – the largest number per head of population in the world. Some patients say the drug also helps with other symptoms, including bladder problems, difficulty sleeping and tremor – the uncontrolled shaking of the arm or leg.

The drug comes with potential side-effects including nausea, tiredness, dizziness and diarrhoea, but these fade and some don't experience them at all.

The SMC also approved drugs for the treatment of the menopause, active ankylosing spondylitis, oesophageal cancer, kidney transplantation and acne.

TEAMS West Derby Golf Club

Golf club is new focus of murder team search

POLICE hunting Olivia's killer launched a massive hunt for the weapons yesterday.

After the shocking murder of the nine-year-old, detectives said they believed two weapons had been used.

Yesterday, Merseyside Police said an "extensive land search" was being carried out at West Derby Golf Club in Liverpool.

The focus of the search was focused on a shallow brook running through the course.

Detective Chief Superintendent Mark Kameen said: "Three weeks on and our investigation continues in our relentless pursuit of the man responsible for Olivia's murder and those who are shielding him.

"I promised that we would leave no stone unturned in our hunt for the offender and the guns used on that night and, following information, we are carrying out a hunt for those weapons.

"Our search teams are being supported by the North West Underwater Search Team and the Merseyside Police drone unit.

"My message to the offender is clear – we will not stop until we have the evidence to put you before the courts and behind bars.

"Olivia's family are absolutely broken by her tragic loss, which has robbed a beautiful young child of the life and future she should have been looking forward to.

"Olivia wanted to be a teacher, or a vet and her family have described her as someone who liked to laugh and make others laugh.

"She was an innocent young child in her own home, who should have been safe."

Nine people have been arrested in connection with Olivia's death but released on bail.

DCS Kameen added: "The investigation team has been working around the clock. We still need more information and we need to find the guns.

"I would appeal to anyone who has information which could help us with our investigation to come forward."

Former Met chief insists police are on right track in Olivia case

THE criminals involved in the murder of Olivia Pratt-Korbel will be brought to justice eventually, a former top cop has insisted.

Nine suspects have been arrested since the nine-year-old was shot dead at her home in Liverpool, yet no charges have been brought.

Ex-Met officer Det Chief Insp Peter Kirkham believes the case will be tough to crack owing to a gangland vow of silence – but it will be only a matter of time before her killers are caught.

He said: "It would not surprise me to find that it is towards the end of the year before we see any major developments. But I am confident that, sooner or later, we will see those involved brought to justice."

Kirkham claimed the fact several suspects in the case have been released on bail "suggests to me the police are sure they are on the right lines as bail puts them on tight timescales to decide whether or not to charge the suspects".

He added: "We are still in the early stages. Charging, let alone conviction, is still a long way away though, and weeks or months of hard work is needed. Even if there was insufficient evidence available, meaning they had to be released pending further enquiries, I would be extremely optimistic about finding more and more as enquiries reach deeper into their backgrounds."

Olivia was killed on August 22 when the suspected gunman burst into her family home at Dovecot while chasing a male into the house.

Det Chief Supt Mark Kameen of Merseyside Police later released CCTV footage of a suspect fleeing the scene.

He said: "This man is toxic to our communities and if you are protecting him he is toxic to you.

"Those involved in serious and organised crime are being significantly disrupted by increased policing activity. We are making these areas toxic to those who commit crime. I said we would bare our teeth and that is precisely what we are doing."

Olivia's mum, Cheryl Korbel, last week issued an emotional plea calling on her daughter's killer to hand himself in. The 46-year-old, who was shot in the wrist, said: "You've done wrong, so you need to own up."

Despite the gangland links, cops have received significant information. The name of the main suspect was widely known within hours and shared with police.

Members of the community allegedly planned to track him down and deliver their own justice.

One source said: "If police need someone to turn grass, that's just not going to happen. But the community has said what they need to say. People are talking because the rules have changed. A nine-year-old has been shot dead in her home."

But a former probation officer told how he fears Olivia's family may never get justice. James Riley set up a group called Get Away 'N' Get Safe that steers Liverpool children from crime.

He said: "The worry is, as time goes on, that maybe they won't find anything forensic. The gun may have been cleaned up or disposed of.

"The clothes the gunman was wearing will have been cleaned or burned. What can you do then?

"Someone will have given the name in. But you can have the same name 200 times and it is not evidence.

"Will the people involved turn on each other? It seems very unlikely. In the criminal underworld the one thing you do not want to be is a grass.

"People have been getting shot in Liverpool for years and when they arrive at the Royal Liverpool Hospital the police are called but they always refuse to co-operate.

"It doesn't matter what they have done to you, you never tell."

Celts fans get Ukraine mercenaries warning

Champions League city packed with militants

MELTING POT Warsaw nightlife

CELTIC fans have been told they will have to muscle past mercenaries from the Ukraine war to reach the bar when in Poland tomorrow.

Warsaw has been chosen to host the Hoops Champions League match with Ukrainian side Shakhtar Donetsk.

With Ukraine at war with Russia, the neighbouring country of Poland was chosen as a safe alternative for the tie.

However, publicans say Warsaw is full of highly-paid mercenaries enjoying rest and relaxation away from the front line by packing out the city's bars and clubs.

One owner of an Irish Bar said:

BY PAUL DRURY
reporters@dailyrecord.co.uk

"They are very good tippers. Some of them are earning £60,000 a month, so it's not surprising they get everyone's attention at the bar."

Warsaw offers some of the cheapest drinks of any European capital, with beer £2-£3 and a pint of Guinness £4.43.

In order to get customers in early for tomorrow night's match, The Shamrock Bar is offering free pints for the first six minutes of the action. Due to the war, Warsaw is a melting pot of nationalities. Mercenaries have been flooding in from all over the world, from as far away as Japan and the US.

The Polish Army stadium is expected to be filled with Scots, Irish, Ukrainians and Poles and many Celtic fans have bought tickets for the 'home' end of the ground via Shakhtar's website.

According to one Hoops supporter, all fans had to do was provide their personal details as well as their home address.

The Foreign Office warn British travellers to be aware that racial attacks can take place against tourists in Warsaw. Unregulated taxi drivers operate at the airport.

A Foreign Office spokesman said: "Most visitors to Poland experience no difficulties. Serious crime against foreigners is rare, but crimes do occur and in some cases attacks have been racially motivated.

"You should be alert to the possibility of street crime and petty theft and foreigners may appear to be easy targets. Keep valuables and cash out of sight."

100mph driver jailed after horror pile-up

BY MICHAEL McQUAID

A DRIVER speeding at 100mph who caused a horrific five-car motorway pile-up was yesterday jailed for 18 months.

Donald Gunn, 36, wandered off from the wreckage to a service station as firefighters fought to free casualties.

He then got a taxi to his sister's home where he fell asleep, a court heard.

A woman suffered a broken ankle and serious injuries to her mouth when the car she was in collided with two other vehicles, leaving her trapped inside.

Roofing firm boss Gunn, from Glasgow, admitted driving dangerously on the M74 in Lanarkshire on December 13, 2020.

Hamilton Sheriff Court heard multiple collisions happened five minutes after Gunn was seen undertaking another car in his hired BMW at high speed in wet conditions.

Jailing Gunn, Sheriff Liam Murphy said: "You were significantly over the speed limit, particularly given the prevailing conditions. There was a serious injury and it's only good fortune that the consequences were not even worse."

BY NATASHA WYNARCZYK

FEW movie scenes pack as much punch as Rocky Balboa pounding through the streets of Philadelphia before sprinting up the city's Museum of Arts steps followed by a throng of cheering supporters.

And now an advert for gambling company Ladbrokes has reimagined the scene, from 1979 classic Rocky II.

But instead of neighbourhood kids, Rocky runs with a cast of athletes including jockeys, footballers and dancers.

The 90-second clip has even got the thumbs-up from Rocky actor Sylvester Stallone, 76 – who approved the idea over breakfast one day.

Movie specialists spent 15,000 hours on visual effects after the advert idea was pitched to Ladbrokes by creative agency Neverland.

The ad, which took six months to complete, was directed by Danish filmmaker Nicolai Fuglsig. His previous work includes the award-winning Sapeurs ad for Guinness, which featured a club of elegantly dressed men in the Congo.

Experts from Selected Works, who also helped to create the ad, painstakingly went through the running scene, digitally removing all of the original cast except for Stallone.

The new version required more than 250 extras, a mix of athletes and actors, on a two-week shoot in a hangar in Budapest, Hungary.

For the shoot in April, they ran across 1:1 scale sets built exactly to match the original

Groundbreaking commercial needed 250 extras, a horse and millimetre precision locations in Philadelphia. One of the Selected Works team had been to all the locations from the Rocky II scene to scan them with LiDAR, a system that uses lasers to create 3D maps.

Alex Fitzgerald, executive producer at Selected Works, said the new extras could then be added to the footage.

He added: "It was very intricate. People had to be in the right place by millimetres so we were working to really finely tuned distances. There were quite a few takes but it was a remarkable accomplishment by Nicolai."

One of the characters is a jockey on a thoroughbred, and while some characters such as the parachuters were CGI, the horse was real.

Alex said: "The horse was shot on camera, which had its own challenges due to the unpredictability of working with animals. Again, it was just trying to calculate how it was done, and we had sand-based terrain to make it comfortable for the horse."

Jon Forsyth, co-founder and acting executive creative director at Neverland, said it was their third advert for Ladbrokes and they were challenged to go bigger this time.

He said: "Because they wanted us to be more audacious, we looked to the world of Marvel-level entertainment, and how we could emulate that. It didn't take long for us to arrive at the Rocky sequence… it's the most epic scene – that brings people together."

> JON FORSYTH OF NEVERLAND ON CREATING THE AD

But Neverland and Selected Works first needed to get approval to use the Rocky II clip, including from writer, director and actor Stallone. He gave the nod over his morning eggs.

Jon said: "It was a long process but as we went through each step it felt like the idea would become a reality. I am a firm believer that a really good idea will find a way to live."

The advert also features the song in the 1979 film Gonna Fly Now, composed by Bill Conti in 1976.

For the commercial it was re-recorded by the English Session Orchestra and sung by the choir London Voices.

James Kennedy, UK brand marketing director for Ladbrokes, said the idea from Neverland knocked him for six when they first pitched it.

He said: "I knew I'd be signing up to a hell of a journey with pitfalls at every step, but leaping in my mind to the likely end result, I felt this was going to be epic.

HAPPY Jon Forsyth

"I'm a big Rocky fan and to take an icon, the most famous run in movie history and mix it all up? I was all in.

"We're confident that this new version packs a punch. We hope it brings a smile to everyone who watches it." Jon added the advert is some welcome escapism for viewers.

He said: "At the moment in particular there's a big appetite for nostalgia and looking back at some of the classics.

"We are living through very challenging times so to have that feel-good factor is really uplifting. There's a massive appetite at the moment for exciting audio-visual content.

"I think this advert could change things going forward.

"In all my 25 years of working in advertising I've never seen anything like this created before. It's off the scale."

DENTIST TRIP TOOK A TERRIFYING TURN

My toothache was actually brain tumour

Mum was 'ready to plan funeral' after docs discovered growth behind eye

RELIEF Emma with son Alfie and, right, with fiance Kieran

BY EMMA DUNN
reporters@dailyrecord.co.uk

A MUM who thought she had toothache was horrified to discover it was a brain tumour.

Emma Webster, 29, was expecting root canal surgery when she suffered terrible pain in a tooth in April 2018.

When it didn't go away after the procesure, she was treated for six months for what was believed to be neuralgia, excruciating pains due to an irritated or damaged nerve.

But after still struggling with numbness on the top her mouth and the tip of her nose, pain and blurred vision, the mum of one from Airdrie was referred to the neurology department at Glasgow's Queen Elizabeth University Hospital.

She was given the devastating news that she had a brain tumour behind her right eye in January 2019, following an MRI scan.

That March, Emma had an operation to remove 70 per cent of the benign tumour and moved back in with her parents with her fiance Kieran McGurk, 31, and their son Alfie, seven.

Emma struggled with headaches and problems with balance for the next eight months before the medication finally began to make her feel better.

Now she has yearly scans to check the growth of the tumour, and is expecting a second child in October 2022.

Emma, an administrator, said: "When I found out, it didn't sink in at all. I went back to work but later that day when I was on the phone I broke down.

"I kept thinking, 'Why me? What have I done wrong?' I could only think of Alfie and what would happen to him if he lost his mum.

"I was told it was benign but I was ready to plan my funeral."

Emma's nana, Alice Travers, died from a brain tumour in 2001, aged 55.

Emma said: "My parents were so worried that the same thing would happen to me."

She added: "I can't believe I've now got to the stage I am not always having to be at the hospital but instead we bought our new home, I am getting married in two years, and I'm expecting my second child in eight weeks.

"I never thought that would be the case back in 2019."

FRIENDS Graham and Sam

Sam is like my teen son

OUTLANDER actor Graham McTavish has branded star Sam Heughan his "unruly teenage son".

The Scots actors met on the historical fantasy show, where Sam, 42, plays Jamie Fraser, and Graham, 61, played Dougal MacKenzie.

The pair have since written two books together.

Speaking to Square Mile, McTavish said: "He's kind of like my unruly teenage son and I'm his grumpy dad, in a weird, weird way."

TRAGIC Justin McLaughlin

Teen faces murder trial

A TEEN is to stand trial charged with murdering a boy at a train station.

The 17-year-old boy, who cannot be named due to his age, is accused of killing Justin McLaughlin, 14, on October 16, 2021.

Prosecutors claim he stabbed Justin on the body with the blade at Glasgow's High Street station.

The boy appeared yesterday at the High Court in Glasgow where he denied murder. A trial was fixed for June 2023.

OUTSPOKEN Actor Brian Cox

Cox: The Tory Government are wassocks

BY STIAN ALEXANDER

VETERAN actor Brian Cox has branded the current Government a "bunch of wassocks".

The 76-year-old star of HBO's Succession, which won him a Golden Globe for his performance as media mogul Logan Roy, said he was sick of the Tories.

Speaking yesterday, the Dundee actor said: "The Government are a bunch of wassocks."

The actor, who also appeared in Manhunter and Troy, said he had switched from Labour to the SNP but was a socialist at heart.

He said: "I don't like the word nationalist. I'm a socialist. But we Scots have had a raw deal for too long."

He also said that posh actors like Eton-educated Damien Lewis and Benedict Cumberbatch, who went to Harrow, had "taken over".

Cox said: "That time in the 60s ... was extraordinary. We were given the opportunity, the advantage. It's sad to see all that opportunity evaporate."

VICTIM Ex-policeman Mike Mosey

Freed police killer is back behind bars

BY RORY CASSIDY

A KILLER who battered a former policeman to death with his own truncheon is back behind bars.

John Mackie was detained after allegedly breaching parole conditions following his release over the killing of Mike Mosey.

The 49-year-old, whose 18-year sentence was reduced to 13 years on appeal, has been now returned to prison and will only be freed again when the Parole Board for Scotland deems it appropriate.

Mackie was originally jailed for life in 2007 for bludgeoning Mike, 58, to death in Braehead, Lanarkshire. He was released on licence in August last year.

A manhunt was launched last month when he vanished amid claims he broke the terms of his parole. Officers searched properties in Lanarkshire in a bid to trace him.

A police spokesperson said: "He was traced on Sunday, September 4." The Parole Board for Scotland was contacted for comment.

I hear myself on TV, it's like someone else ..I feel a fraud

Host Kamara on battle to beat speech problem

TREATMENT Kamara has apraxia

FAMOUS VOICE Kamara shot to fame on Sky Sports

BY MARK JEFFERIES

TV'S Chris Kamara says he feels a "fraud" after being persuaded to carry on his presenting career, despite a speech impediment.

The former Sky Sports pundit, who now fronts ITV's The Games, and presents Ninja Warrior UK and Cash in the Attic, had considered quitting after being diagnosed with apraxia.

TV bosses assured the 64-year-old that they still wanted him but the ex-Leeds, Swindon and Brentford star has admitted he is finding it hard to carry on in the job.

He said: "I feel a fraud now in terms of broadcasting. I don't bring to the table what I used to. So that's hard.

"I feel I'm doing these programmes and they're not getting the best of me but they're tolerating me.

"It's like anything else, you take it for granted, your old self. That tribute that Sky gave me – that's reserved for someone who passes away. I've had the tribute while I'm still alive that people don't get.

"You always read the obituaries and the comments and you think, 'Why didn't people say that?'

So I think maybe I should have bowed out then – taken the accolades and said, 'Thank you'. Am I tarnishing what I've got and what I had?"

Speaking to Steven Bartlett on the Diary of a CEO podcast, he said he was talked into hosting the seventh series of Ninja Warrior, and having watched recordings he feels he's not up to his old self. He said: "I tried to pull out when they rang me.

"They said,: 'Don't worry about it'. I watched a bit of the first episode and even though it doesn't sound like me, it's passable."

Kamara, who left Sky Sports at the end of the last football season, admitted his condition has left him fearful of the future.

He said: "My life away from the screen couldn't be any better – grandkids, family, it's perfect.

"But every day I wake up, the first thing I think is am I going to be able to talk today?"

He added: "It feels like someone has taken over my voice box. The voice that used to come out would come out at 300 miles an hour – you've seen me on the results and Soccer Saturday, motormouth, talking and not even waiting for a breath, just keep going and going.

"Now when I hear myself or see myself on TV, it's someone else."

Last month it was revealed that Kamara has tried hypnotherapy.

Leeds-based hypnotherapist Daniel McDermid, who has been treating Kamara, tweeted: "It's been an absolute pleasure helping you, Kammy. You're one of life's genuine gentlemen and an inspiration to so many. You're doing great and truly deserve every success."

Chris replied: "Thanks Daniel. You have given me great confidence."

Kamara revealed his speech problem in March, saying: "Hopefully I can beat this."

Woman faces pup theft rap

A WOMAN has appeared in court after a litter of puppies were stolen during a raid on a house.

Eight nine-week-old Cockapoo pups were taken from premises in Kirriemuir, Angus, on August 29.

Angela Newlands, 32, appeared at Dundee Sheriff Court last week charged with housebreaking, theft, fraud by credit or debit card and threatening and abusive behaviour.

Newlands made no plea and was bailed. The pups are back with their owner.

Car blaze is 'suspicious'

POLICE have launched a probe into a "suspicious" blaze after a car was set alight on a quiet residential street in Inverness.

The incident took place shortly after midnight on Monday when a vehicle caught fire on Benula Road.

Local residents shared footage on social media.

A police spokesman said: "No one was injured but the car was significantly damaged. Officers are treating the fire as suspicious and enquiries are continuing."

No food for 4 days

Charity tells of desperate plea

BY SARAH WARD
reporters@dailyrecord.co.uk

A FOOD BANK has warned of people going four days without eating – as it said 130 families per week were using it.

Workers at Drumchapel Food Bank in Glasgow said more and more people with jobs are reaching out to them for help.

One person went four days without eating before phoning the food bank.

Volunteer Ryan McGeady told how they were desperately in need of more food for struggling families.

"I had a guy who was phoning me last week, saying he hasn't eaten in four days. I told him he should have phoned after the first day. There is absolutely no shame in it."

"Now, we get a lot of people who are in work poverty, so they are coming here before they head off to work, some of which I know have not-bad-paying jobs. That just shows you how badly the cost-of-living crisis is affecting people – especially for people who don't already own their home and they pay their rent and bills. The change has been quite shocking."

The vital service has also been receiving fewer donations and an increasing number of requests in the past few months, which has forced it to put out an urgent appeal again.

In May, the team told us that their shelves were almost empty. Ryan explained: "With the rising cost of living, it seems that the middle class, who usually donate to us, have been unable to.

"We are not getting as many donations but we are also seeing an extreme rise in enquiries. Our numbers are back up to around 105 and 130 families a week. The biggest families we have that are dependent on us are around 11 people. We have just been trying to keep up with this kind of demand as best as we can.

"We are making small changes to parcels by lessening the amount, which we don't like having to do, but unfortunately just to get around to all the families it is something we have to do."

Drumchapel Food Bank is also facing challenges beyond food distribution, as more families are "stuck at home because they can't afford to eat out or take the kids out".

Deliveries are every Thursday, but slots are limited to disabled or Covid-positive people as the cost of petrol is also putting a strain on the organisation.

The volunteer, who has been with the service for more than two years, added: "We also have a lot of people ask us for activities, such as pens and paper, for children."

RISING DEMAND More people are contacting the food bank

EDITED BY SALLY McLEAN

If you thought endless cups of coffee were the only way to help boost concentration and focus, think again. James Moore reveals some surprising, scientifically proven ways to pep up your performance

Focus pocus

Juice the job
Make sure you have a glass of orange juice with your breakfast before you start your working day. A study by the University of Reading showed it could improve alertness and concentration. The effect has been linked to flavonoids in the fruit.

Go green
Put a peace lily on your work-station. A Dutch study found that indoor plants help you concentrate, while research at Exeter University found greenery in the workplace was linked to improved productivity and boosted staff well-being by 47 per cent.

Stand up
Standing rather than sitting while you work could give you a lift. Scientists at the University of Leicester discovered that more than half of people using standing desks felt more engaged at work after a year of using them.

Chew chew
Boffins at Cardiff University revealed people who chewed gum during a memory task were able to focus for longer compared with those who didn't. Further research has shown that the activity increases blood flow to the brain.

Choc shock
While having too many sugary snacks can make your energy levels slump after a while, a bit of good quality dark chocolate won't hurt if you're trying to do mental arithmetic. A Northumbria University study found flavanols in the dark stuff meant calculations weren't as taxing – and that those in the trial were less likely to feel tired or mentally drained.

Clocking on
We all know a good night's sleep will help you stay energised the next day but experts at Harvard University in the US say it is just as important to keep a regular bedtime. Changing the time you head for a kip could be as damaging as jet lag from a flight.

Pet power
Putting a picture of your dog or cat close by could improve your concentration by five per cent, a Japanese study found. If they are puppies or kittens, that figure goes up to 10 per cent. Scientists think the positive emotions of seeing the snaps sparks us into action.

Lunch legend
Do some exercise during your break. One study found that walking for half an hour at lunchtime improves enthusiasm and relaxation. Researchers have also found that a five-minute walk every hour reduces food cravings.

Washed up
If you're tired, caffeine can help but, according to a study in the journal Clinical Neurophysiology, the combination of washing your face and drinking coffee help boost how alert the coffee makes you feel.

Feel fruity
Ditch that packet of crisps and take some kiwi fruit to work instead. Eating two of them can improve mood and energy, a study by the University of Otago in New Zealand shows. It's thought the vitamin C is key.

Make a note
Your parents may have spent years telling you music prevents you from concentrating properly but, if you're allowed to listen to music while at work, then sticking on some pop music is actually fine. Research by Mindlab International found 58 per cent of people were faster at data entry when listening to pop music. Meanwhile, listening to classical tunes can help memory recall, according to a US study.

Draw conclusions
Struggling to complete tasks without distraction? Doodling at work could be the answer if you want to stay focused. Scientists at Plymouth University found it helps you concentrate on information. One example of this was doodlers could recall names and places 29 per cent better than people who were not doodling.

Go green
Load up your plate with some leafy greens. Research published in the journal Neurology indicates that people who ate two portions of the stuff daily were typically able to focus on tasks as well as people five years younger than them.

Scroll down
Hide your phone. Using social media during working hours is a serious distraction and can reduce work performance and concentration, according to research by the University of Bergen in Norway. Stick the phone in a drawer so it's out of sight, out of mind.

Being yourself
Two-thirds of workers say that showing their emotions at work – whether by crying or having a laugh – makes them more productive, according to a survey carried out by LinkedIn.

How video games helped me learn to walk again

Ruby Flanagan tells Dawn Collinson how VR therapy is retraining her brain to adapt to her prosthetic limb

AS THE mum of a new baby, Ruby Flanagan had very little interest in video gaming a year ago.

The nurse hadn't played games since she was a teenager and had no intention of taking them up again any time soon.

"I definitely wasn't a keen gamer, I wasn't into that at all," she said. "I remember playing against my little brother on things like Mario Kart when we were young and having a go on dance mats but that was it."

All that changed after a family shopping trip in August last year when Ruby was hit by a car as she carried her newborn son Leon across a supermarket car park.

She managed to throw Leon to safety but her own injuries were so severe that her right leg had to be amputated, her left needed extensive reconstruction and her pelvis was shattered.

The 25-year-old, who lives on the Wirral in Merseyside, spent three months in Aintree Hospital and had 11 operations before being transferred to STEPS rehabilitation centre in Sheffield.

It's here that, for the past six months, Ruby has been unexpectedly gaming again.

As part of the treatment to give her back her independence and help her adapt to the prosthetic leg she now wears, Ruby has been having weekly MindPod sessions.

The neuro-animation therapy, based on computer game VR technology, has been designed to help patients recover their motor skills and cognitive function. In Ruby's case, it improves her core strength, balance and coordination.

Motion sensors allow her to control Bandit, an animated dolphin, in movements she can then apply to everyday life.

Chasing fish up high in the sea translates to reaching for a wall cupboard in the kitchen, down low replicates bending to pick up one of Leon's toys.

"You stand in front of the screen, it tracks every move you make and the dolphin responds to that," said Ruby.

"It doesn't feel like any other kind of therapy, it's such a relaxed vibe and there's something really soothing about dolphins."

Alongside MindPod, Ruby has also had treatment including hydrotherapy, massage, acupuncture and physiotherapy.

She added: "I thought I'd just get up and start walking again but it took a lot of energy and time to get me where I am. It's exactly like when you learn to ride a bike, finding the point of balance."

Ruby says being able to play with Leon, who's now 18 months old, has been a major focus throughout her recovery.

She said: "Therapy has given me back so much quality of life. Now I'm looking forward to taking him back to baby groups, and meeting up with my friends and their children."

TRAUMA Ruby had horror injuries

WHAT EXACTLY IS MINDPOD?

MINDPOD neuro-animation therapy was created by Swiss firm MindMaze and is based on technology developed at the Johns Hopkins University School in Baltimore, US.

A dolphin was chosen for its intelligence, playfulness and expressive movements.

STEPS in Sheffield is one of two centres in the UK to offer MindPod – the other is the Royal Buckinghamshire Hospital.

Designed to improve motion skills, cardiovascular capacity and cognitive responses, it's used most with patients recovering from a stroke or brain injury, spinal cord damage and amputation. Ruby's senior occupational therapist, Lucy Greensmith, said: "MindPod mimics the actions of everyday life but in a free-flowing way.

"Fish are swimming in all directions and you're having to reach out, up and down, so it replicates all those things Ruby is needing to do when she's at home with the baby."

DR RAN

I can reme the p of no know if I'd able t catch next

The showbiz medic opens up to Amy Packer about his own experiences of asthma and explains why he believes we need to take the condition more seriously

OVER the past decade, Dr Ranj Singh has become a much loved household name, appearing as a resident doctor on This Morning and Morning Live, wowing us on All Star Musicals, winning Cooking With The Stars and competing on Strictly, where he shone with his Aladdin-inspired quickstep.

But away from the sequins and camera crews, Dr Ranj, as he's affectionately become known since first gracing our screens on CBeebies show Get Well Soon, still works part-time as an NHS doctor. Talking to him, it's clear medicine remains a strong focus, despite the draw of showbiz.

In fact, the importance of looking after our own health is a lesson he learned at a very young age, when both Ranj, now 43, and younger brother Harminderjit, 42, developed asthma.

"I can still remember the panic of lying in bed when my breathing was bad, wondering whether I'd be able to catch my next breath, which was a really horrible experience," he said of his childhood in Medway, Kent.

"Thankfully my asthma was only ever mild, and I was lucky enough never to be hospitalised."

In fact, the pair both believed they had "grown out" of the condition once they reached adulthood, having not been troubled by symptoms for years.

But when Covid struck, the brothers received an unexpected wake-up call.

At the start of the pandemic, Harminderjit, who works in financial services and still lives in Kent, came down with Covid and started struggling for breath.

"I wasn't with him but by the time he got to his local medical centre he was too breathless to speak," said Ranj, who lives in London. "And although he recognised that he was probably having an asthma attack, he didn't have an inhaler or a clue how serious it actually was.

"Thankfully he got help, has recovered and he's been fine ever since, but his life was definitely put at risk that day. It was a reminder to me of how dangerous asthma can be." It's one of the reasons Ranj makes time to support leading lung charity Asthma + Lung UK. According to the charity's research, one in six adults doesn't realise asthma attacks can be fatal and yet four die from one every day.

FEARS Ranj and his brother Harminderjit

> The last thing I want to do is scaremonger but it can put children and adults in ICU

Additionally, 70 per cent of those with asthma are not getting the basic care they are entitled to, such as a yearly asthma review, due to pressures on the NHS.

As lung disease is the third biggest killer in the UK, it is obviously cause for concern.

"Potentially anyone with asthma can become very ill," said Ranj, who has also seen it first hand having spent still ember panic t ying be to n my breath working in children's A&E and sive care in London hospitals. he last thing I want to do as a ian is to scaremonger but I do it's important to realise that ma can put both children and s into ICU."

hough asthma is a relatively mon condition, affecting around llion people in the UK, Ranj ves it should be taken far more usly than it is, and admits he finds le's nonchalant approach rating and worrying.
said: "As a doctor, I have looked children with asthma in intensive who are extremely unwell. It's an edictable condition and if it's not aged properly it can make people erously ill.
utting a child on a ventilator is r an easy option and it is always a king outcome for parents. Some y don't realise that asthma can be hreatening.
his needs to change if we want to prevent children from ending up in hospital with serious asthma attacks," he added.

MOVES Appearing on Strictly in 2018

Ranj's timely warning comes early in the new school year, when children are at most risk of life-threatening asthma attacks because they are exposed to the "perfect storm" of viruses, colder weather and a change in routine.

Recent statistics from Asthma + Lung UK have revealed that the number of children hospitalised in the first four weeks of the autumn term can surge by up to 300 per cent.

"Some children may fall out of their usual preventer inhaler routines over the summer break which can leave them much more vulnerable to an attack," said Erika Radford, head of health advice at Asthma + Lung UK.

"The best thing parents can do is to ensure their child takes their preventer inhaler (usually brown) every day as prescribed. This helps calm the inflammation in their airways and reduces the risk of an asthma attack.

"Children should also have their reliever inhaler (usually blue) and a spacer (if they use one) at school to use if they have asthma symptoms."

But for Ranj, it's not just about changing people's behaviour, it's about challenging unhelpful attitudes.

"People see asthma as a mild illness that isn't harmful but the truth is it can be dangerous, even fatal, and needs to be taken seriously," he said. "It's surprising the number of people with an asthma diagnosis who don't carry a reliever inhaler with them and who don't know what to do in the event of an asthma attack. We need to change that."

He believes asthma should be treated as seriously as a food allergy and reliever inhalers put on an equal footing with EpiPens and carried everywhere.

"If someone goes into anaphylactic shock, it is treated as a medical emergency, but if someone has an asthma attack it is often dismissed as a bit of a cough or a wheeze and that isn't right," said Ranj.

> "If someone has an attack it's often dismissed as a cough or a wheeze

The good news is, he adds, that if managed really well, asthma doesn't need to dominate the lives of children or parents. This is a sentiment echoed by Erika, who says there are precautions parents can take to prevent their child from becoming seriously unwell or ending up in hospital.

"Parents should make sure that their child has a yearly review with their GP or asthma nurse," she says.

"This should include a check to ensure they are using their inhaler properly and have a written asthma action plan."

STAR Ranj on children's show Get Well Soon

Over a million children in the UK have asthma and every 2.5 minutes a child has a potentially life-threatening asthma attack. The warning signs that a child's asthma symptoms are getting worse include coughing and wheezing at night or early in the morning, breathlessness, complaining about chest or stomach pain, or needing their reliever inhaler (usually blue) three or more times a week.

"Older children present very much like adults and tend to cough and wheeze, fortunately they are usually able to express what they are feeling," said Ranj. "But if a younger child is struggling to breathe, amongst the usual signs parents need to look out for are fatigue, a reluctance to speak or play and a tendency for them to pull in their chests when breathing as they might not be able to articulate what is happening.

"By being vigilant, giving medication as prescribed and knowing how to deal with an asthma attack, most parents should feel in control of their child's asthma," he added.

"But it's still important to know when to get help and what to do in an emergency."

WHAT TO DO IF YOU'RE HAVING AN ASTHMA ATTACK

GP Dr Andy Whittamore, clinical lead at Asthma + Lung UK, has advice for those experiencing an asthma attack:

- Sit up straight and try to keep calm.
- Take one puff of your reliever inhaler (usually blue) every 30-60 seconds for up to 10 puffs.
- If you feel worse at any point or you don't feel better after 10 puffs, call 999 for an ambulance.
- If the ambulance has not arrived after 10 minutes and your symptoms are not improving, repeat step 2.
- If your symptoms are no better after repeating step 2, and the ambulance has still not arrived, contact 999 again immediately.

Asthma + Lung UK is committed to transforming lung health by campaigning for breathlessness to be taken seriously, funding groundbreaking research and providing advice and help to people with lung conditions. For more on asthma attacks, visit asthmaandlung.org.uk or call 0300 222 5800.

Dear Coleen..

THE STRAIGHT-TALKING PROBLEM PAGE

email dearcoleen@dailyrecord.co.uk

I love him but his cross-dressing no longer a turn-on

Dear Coleen

I'M a 34-year-old woman and I'm married with a five-year-old son. I've been with my husband for eight years and we used to have a really fun, sexy relationship.

However, the physical side of things has become a problem for me and I'm running out of excuses not to have sex.

As long as I've known him, he's dabbled in a bit of cross-dressing – he likes to wear lipstick, lingerie and heels sometimes at home, but doesn't go out in public dressed as a woman.

In our 20s I used to find it quite a turn-on and a bit edgy – he's good looking and sexy – but as we've got older and now we have a son, it just doesn't feel the same and is actually a turn-off.

He's asked me if his cross-dressing is the reason we don't have sex any more, and I lied and said no, explaining I was tired and stressed, and just not in the right headspace.

I do love him and he's a really good dad and partner, but our sex life is a huge issue and I'm too young to give up on that.

I've always been supportive of his cross-dressing in the past, but I'm struggling with it at the moment and I don't think my feelings will change.

I'd welcome your opinion and any ideas you have on what I can do.

Coleen says

FIRSTLY, and most importantly, don't lie to him. I understand you don't want to hurt him, but lying won't get you any further down the line.

You have to be honest and tell him what you've told me – there was a time when you liked it, but now it's not doing it for you, in fact it's doing the opposite.

> "Our sex life is a big issue and I don't want to give it up

At the moment he doesn't know this, so he's worried and he's trying to work out what's changed and why you don't want to be intimate with him.

Look, it's OK to change. Our views, attitudes, likes and dislikes can change as we move through life, so things that were fun once aren't fun any more.

The fact you still love him and he's a great dad is a great foundation and worth holding on to, but you need a chat about how you can make the relationship work for both of you. Is there a compromise where he doesn't cross-dress when you're around or it doesn't play a part in your sex life? What does he see as the options?

You can't keep avoiding the conversation because you'll both become increasingly annoyed and resentful, which could take you down a road you can't come back from.

COLEEN'S WORDS OF WISDOM

Don't compare and despair! Comparing yourself to others is pointless. Absolutely no one has it all figured out, even if it looks that way from the outside. Focus on doing your best with what you have and appreciate all the good things in your life.

SHOCKED Kim's in a tailspin

EMMERDALE
STV, 8.05pm

STILL stunned after the Jamie bombshell, the police show Kim definitive proof that he really is alive. Meanwhile, a confused Millie reacts badly when she overhears Kim talking about her dad. She runs away, leaving Kim in a tailspin.

A guilty MacKenzie starts out in pieces over his affair. He plans to tell Charity the truth but, as she gets suggestive and he follows her upstairs, it looks as if he's not going to confess after all.

TORN Kat's about to marry Phil but will Alfie get in the way?

EASTENDERS
BBC1, 9.30pm

WEDDING plans spiral out of control as Alfie tries every trick in the book to make Kat rethink her big day with Phil.

Phil's seeing red, so after Kat calms him down, she reels to Stacey about her predicament. Then Alfie calls her about the twins and she's forced to go and fetch them, making them late for the wedding.

Whether she makes it as far as "I do" is anyone's guess...

Even Mo is taking bets at the church on whether the wedding will actually happen or not.

CLASS OF '22 Who will rise to the challenge?

The sunshine we all need

THE GREAT BRITISH BAKE OFF
Channel 4, 8pm

WHO cares if the weather's dreary and summer's over – we can all languish in sunny Bake Off world instead.

Awesome foursome Prue Leith, Paul Hollywood, Matt Lucas and Noel Fielding are back for a 13th series.

Over the next 10 weeks, 12 excitable new, apron-wearing bakers will whisk and whip their way through 30 technical challenges – all in a bid to win TV's most coveted baking accolade.

But before we meet them there's a witty pre-series skit, introducing Noel Fielding as Princess Layer Cake, Luke Piewalker, Prue Bacca and DarfBaker.

Yes, yes, we know you're a funny bunch.

The latest lot include kilt-loving, nuclear scientist James, and a supermarket worker, known by pals as "compost Carole" because she likes gardening. Before their first signature challenge is unveiled, Malaysian-born Syabira shares her series strategy: "Bake it until you make it."

The newcomers are tasked with making a batch of identical mini-sandwich cakes.

"I've got my big guns here," says Polish Janusz, spraying (drowning) his sponge with cherry liquor. Getting the judges drunk are we?

Others are already feeling the heat. Dad Will's buttercream has split – twice. Youngest baker Maisam, who is originally from Libya, has a crumbling sponge she hopes she can cover up with some curdled buttercream.

By the end of the technical challenge – making red velvet cakes – you'll already be putting bets on the series frontrunners versus the series flops.

But with their showstopper task – to build a memorable family home out of cake – who knows which bake will stack up as best.

MYSTERY Fiona and Philip with the oil painting

FAKE OR FORTUNE?
BBC2, 8pm

FOR 30 years, art history lecturer Ian Macdonald made it his mission to discover the origins of an oil painting of Christ hanging in a church in Port Glasgow. Could it be, he wondered, a lost masterpiece by one of the greatest painters of Northern Renaissance art?

When Ian sadly died last year, having reached out to Fake or Fortune for help, the artist's name was still a mystery.

Now his widow Marjorie is hoping for answers. Can Fiona Bruce, expert Philip Mould – whose knowledge is staggering – and their team from the art documentary show solve this ecclesiastical whodunnit?

This last-of-the-series investigation is, says posh Phil, among its toughest to date.

Ian had whittled his search down to seven possible artists.

With the help of experts who use science to date the age of the wood panel, they can confidently say it was painted after 1574, ruling out at least one of the art suspects.

It's hard not to become invested in the case as the team delves deeper to untangle the mystery.

THE PYRENEES WITH MICHAEL PORTILLO
Channel 5, 9pm

MICHAEL Portillo has become a bit reflective as he approaches his 70th birthday next May, so he's effectively taken a "find yourself" gap year.

It's not quite eat, pray, love, but the former cabinet minister and broadcaster has embarked on a journey of self-discovery, walking stretches of the Pyrenees between Spain and France.

On his final leg, he's back in Spain for a deeply personal end to the tour.

In 1939, Michael's father Luis Gabriel Portillo Perez fled through these mountains as a political refugee from the Spanish Civil War.

At the tiny village of La Vajol, where many refugees headed to cross the border into France, Michael meets Margaret, some of whose family escaped through here.

Together, they walk part of the route many refugees took and share their families' stories.

Reflecting on what his father must have gone through, Michael says: "I hope he might think that my coming here is a tribute to him and to his suffering."

Virgo Aug 23 - Sept 22

YOU aren't likely to feel any enthusiasm for plans that take you away from your usual routine. You don't mind being busy even if your work keeps you confined to one area. What you aren't in the mood for is to faff about, running here, there and everywhere, with nothing to show for your effort.

For more call 0905 789 4176 (80p/min + network access charge)

Libra Sept 23-Oct 23

IT WON'T be that easy to sneak away from your usual scene even though you are hoping to do a friend a favour. A partner will suspect you are up to something when in fact you are trying to protect someone who needs your support right now. Keep a calm focus on that.

For more call 0905 789 4177 (80p/min + network access charge)

Scorpio Oct 24 - Nov 22

SOMEONE close is unusually quiet and you suspect they are feeling down. You might regret asking them what's wrong. They may be annoyed with you for some reason and they've been waiting for this opportunity to complain and criticise. It might be better to leave them to sulk.

The best of British

THE Royal Family have once again proved that they are the biggest attraction in Britain.

Nobody can come even close to having the open displays of admiration shown with the loss of their mother, grandmother and great-grandmother, and our Queen, throughout her full life.

The death of our longest-ever serving monarch has left a huge void in our lives. And we can only hope that King Charles can continue the superb job she did.

Our towns, villages and hamlets from Aberdeenshire to Edinburgh were lined with her loyal subjects paying respects.

The reports worldwide of almost every word, smile and tear shows we still hold firm to the finest traditions.

Tom Baxter, Denny, Stirlingshire

Unionist Sturgeon

IT was gratifying to see Nicola Sturgeon sign the oath following the speech in which King Charles III undertook to uphold 'the acts passed in the parliament of both kingdoms for union of the two kingdoms'.

And so say all of us!

I trust her supporters will note her endorsement of the union of Scotland and England in the UK.

Jeers out of place

ONCE again the radical faction within Scottish politics has shamed the country by booing at the Queen's cortege.

Give us world news

IS IT just me or are there plenty more people who believe the media has gone into hyper-mode regarding the death of the Queen? I feel sorry for her family but we are now being subjected to 24-hour daily coverage.

There is other worthy news in the world but we are being excluded from it.

M Shaddick, Edinburgh

OUT OF TOUCH Liz Truss has misread Russia's situation and only punished her own people

Truss's own goal on Putin

"IT'S not us it's the climate" became a politicians' excuse at the millennium. "It's not us it's the virus" in turn became a new excuse in early 2020.

"It's not us it's Putin" is the latest one used by our new PM Liz Truss.

Well, it's not Putin imposing sanctions on his own gas, it's western politicians.

News agencies like Bloomberg Economics estimate that Russian revenues from energy exports will rise by more than a third in 2022 from 2021 as they cash in on soaring energy prices.

I call on Western leaders to end these sanctions.

They don't hurt Putin but are sanctions on ordinary western people.

THE streets fell silent as the Queen's coffin was driven away from her official Scottish residence in Edinburgh.

Thousands stood for hours in a bid to get a spot on the Royal Mile to watch the procession as it made its way to St Giles' Cathedral yesterday.

The mood was solemn but there was also a noticeable excitement over the prospect of seeing the new King for the first time since Charles became monarch.

Record readers had their say.

Norma Henderson felt moved, saying: "It's beautiful to see everyone showing respect and giving thanks."

Mary Davies agreed: "The Queen deserves this respect for serving our country for 70 years."

Steve Castle praised the city: "Amazing for Edinburgh showing her the respect."

Gail Costello was choked, saying: "It's great to see people showing respect for a wonderful Queen who will be missed."

Ann McCormick added: "God bless our Queen. God save our King."

EXEC TO RETIRE AFTER NINE YEARS IN JOB

THE boss of outsourcing giant Serco is to leave – after raking in more than £30million in pay and perks.

Rupert Soames, grandson of ex-PM Sir Winston Churchill, will retire next September.

The 63-year-old took over as chief executive in 2014 in the wake of a scandal involving overcharging taxpayers for electronic tagging offenders.

He is credited with turning around the firm's fortunes.

Serco was among those that landed lucrative Covid test-and-trace contracts but was criticised for its poor record on tracking down people.

Soames insisted last year he was "proud" of the role the company played.

Serco has a host of deals across government, from the Ministry of Defence to the NHS and running immigration detention centres. Soames will step down in December but stay on as a strategic advisor until September next year.

WEALTHY Soames raked in £30m

Since becoming CEO in 2014, he has netted more than £28million in salary, bonuses and other payments – including £4million last year.

Given that his salary is £850,000, plus his notice period and the opportunity to rake in further bonuses, his total earnings since joining are likely to top £30million.

He also owns shares worth nearly £11million.

Soames said yesterday: "It has been the privilege of my working life to lead Serco for the last eight years but it is now time for me to outsource myself."

He will be replaced by Mark Irwin, a private equity veteran who has been at Serco since 2013.

» THE UK economy grew by a feeble 0.2 per cent in July, the Office for National Statistics said.

Experts reckon the impact of the 10-day mourning period following the Queen's death could push the economy into recession sooner than some expected.

MICHAEL Murray, the new boss of Sports Direct owner Frasers, has hinted it might sell more offshoots – just as it is linked with a possible bid for historic tailor Gieves & Hawkes.

Murray, 32, is married to the daughter of Frasers' billionaire founder, Mike Ashley.

» HOME appliances giant Electrolux issued a profit warning yesterday as soaring inflation hit demand for its products.

The Swedish company responded by announcing plans to cut costs.

Electrolux is Europe's biggest home appliances firm, selling about 60million fridges, freezers, ovens, cookers and the like every year.

HOUSE ABOUT THAT

ADMIRALTY HOUSE (3.55) can maintain Alan King's recent revival on a cracking card at Yarmouth.

BY GARRY OWEN

The three-year-old put in his best shift yet when chinned by Frantastic at Newbury.

The gelding looks nicely unexposed over 1m 2f so he can go one better in this event.

THE DEFIANT (5.03) should be rock-solid for shrewd Daniel Steele in the Moulton Handicap.

The speedster produced another career best when edged out by The Daley Express at Goodwood.

The gelding remains fairly treated so he can gain compensation in another competitive contest.

WESTERN STARS (3.28) will be set to sparkle for Ed Dunlop in the Racing TV Handicap at Redcar.

The talented gelding should relish tackling 1m 2f after comfortably defeating Cosmos Raj at Pontefract.

Nigel Tinkler is just hitting form so I'm backing AS IF BY CHANCE (4.03) in the sprint.

The four-year-old looked better than ever when only just held by Hail Sezer over track and trip.

The gelding was slightly unlucky that day so he can take full advantage of an inviting mark.

OH SO CHIC (5.10) can really turn on the style for thriving Ed Bethell in the staying handicap.

The mare improved again when cosily denying Bouncing Bobby in a decent event over at Carlisle.

The five-year-old is open to more progress for her current yard so she should shrug off a 3lb penalty.

FINE BY ME (1.50) can claim a tricky conditionals' hurdle at Uttoxeter for Nigel Twiston-Davies.

The gelding took the step up to three miles in his stride when routing Bird On The Wire at Bangor.

The five-year-old looks unexposed as a stayer so he can see off a strong field despite a 5lb penalty.

The handicap chase is just as tight but I'm going with Sam England's KINONDO KWETU (4.10).

The gelding can defy a 5lb hike for slamming Kauto D'amour on his fencing bow at Market Rasen.

TIMES OF HIS LIFE
Alcaraz hoists trophy in Times Square yesterday

BY NEIL McLEMAN
TEEN sensation Carlos Alcaraz has the star quality of "Ronaldo, Maradona and Messi combined" according to Greg Rusedski.

And the Spaniard's coach has warned the youngest world No.1 has reached only 60 per cent of his potential after his stunning US Open triumph.

At a historic Grand Slam where Serena Williams retired, fan favourite Alcaraz heralded the start of a new age in men's tennis by lifting his first major title.

He beat new world No.2 Casper Ruud in a thrilling final full of outrageous rallies 6-4 2-6 7-6 6-3 amid raucous scenes in the Arthur Ashe Stadium. Chants of "Ole, ole, ole, Carlos, Carlos" rang around the biggest stage in tennis like a football match.

He's the youngest Grand Slam winner since Rafa Nadal at the 2005 French Open. But analyst Rusedski compared Real Madrid fan Alcaraz, who plays every point like a cup final, to football's recent greats.

Rusedski said: "It won't be like Emma Raducanu last year where she won and then disappeared for a year.

"He is the real deal. He has everything. This guy is a phenom. Djokovic was the best mover before him. Before that it was Federer.

"This guy is like watching Ronaldo, Maradona and Messi combined as one. He's just off the charts. He could win over 20 majors."

PETE SAMPRAS
won the 1990 US Open by beating Andre Agassi. He went on to win 14 Grand Slams.

RAFA NADAL
won the 2005 French Open by beating Mariano Puerta. He holds a male record of 22 Grand Slams.

NOVAK DJOKOVIC
won the Miami Masters but his best Grand Slam result was reaching the quarter-finals of the 2006 French Open. He won the first of his 21 Grand Slams at the 2008 Australian Open aged 20.

ATP Tour match in February 2020 and had to qualify for last year's Australian Open when he was ranked world No.141.

Since then, Alcaraz has rocketed up the rankings.

But his coach Juan Carlos Ferrero said: "He's on 60 per cent of his game. He can improve a lot of things. Once you get to No.1, it's not done. He knows and I know we have to keep working."

Asked if this was the start of the Alcaraz era, ex-world No.1 Ferrero said: "I'd love it to happen. He was born to play this kind of tournament."

Alcaraz had to save a match point against Jannik Sinner in the quarter-finals after losing to him at Wimbledon.

And Ferrero added: "Maybe Sinner and Carlos could dominate for the next 10 years. The players now, they're going to play very motivated against him now he's No.1. It's like Real Madrid-Barcelona, there's a rivalry that gets you to increase your level. He has to be ready."

Nadal won the 2005 French Open two days after his 19th birthday with Alcaraz 19 years, four months and six days old when he won his first Grand Slam.

And Alcaraz said: "Rafa has been in touch – he texted me. I had a lot of messages."

Asked about future targets, he added: "I don't want to limit myself. I want to just stay No.1 for many weeks, many years! And of course trying to win tournaments, I hope this US Open is the first of many.

"It's crazy for me. I've never thought I was going to achieve something like that at 19.

"It is incredible to create history being the youngest world No.1 but it is even more difficult to do what the Big Three have done, to stay there for 20 years. I don't want to compare myself to them but I'm going to try to be a little like them."

Beaten opponent Ruud said: "He's riding that wave. At the moment he's the best player in the world."

Djokovic's refusal to take a Covid 19 vaccine meant he was absent in New York but is set for January's Australian Open. Nadal will again be favourite for the French Open and Russian Daniil Medvedev, first to top the rankings outside the Big Four since 2004, is only 26.

But Alcaraz has won 51 matches and five titles this year, beating Nadal, Djokovic and Alex Zverev to win May's Madrid Masters.

Now off to Valencia for the Davis Cup Group B matches against Serbia, Canada and South Korea, he added: "I'm excited to play for my country."

FRANCO FEARS LACK OF PREP

FRANCO SMITH fears Glasgow will be undercooked when they kick off their URC opener away to Benetton on Friday night, after both pre-season matches were cancelled.

Their first hit-out against Worcester was called off because the financially stricken English side had not managed to pay their players' wages, so Warriors had a bounce match against the Ayrshire Bulls semi-pro team.

Last Friday's game against Ulster didn't go ahead following the death of the Queen.

New boss Smith said: "I'm not concerned about our physical preparation, just the game-related prep. I'd have liked to have seen them against opposition."

WAT WE NEED IS TO BE MORE CLINICAL NOW

HAMISH WATSON reckons Edinburgh are in a good place going into the new season – but he admits they'll need to be more clinical to mount a real challenge in the URC.

The Gunners were top of the league early on last season and played a much more attacking style under new boss Mike Blair. In the end though, they only just scraped into the play-offs and lost in the last eight to the Stormers.

Scotland star Watson is proud of how much the team improved. But he knows they are far from the finished article.

He said: "It was kind of annoying the way the season ended. We always knew the quarter-final away at the Stormers was going to be a tough game.

"We did maybe just fade away a little bit at the end of the season but as a whole we had a really good season. Our attack was good and up there with most line-breaks in the URC, most tackle-breaks and all the right stuff.

"But we didn't turn many of those line-breaks into points at times and we can definitely be a bit more clinical. So that's definitely something we're hopefully getting better at going into the season.

"We've got a few big players coming back from injuries, so Edinburgh is in a pretty good place."

As well as a new coach, Edinburgh had a new playmaker last year after Blair Kinghorn was moved up from full-back to stand-off.

Watson believes his Scotland team-mate adapted well and backed him to keep on getting better in this campaign, that begins on Saturday at home against the Dragons.

He added: "Last season Blair was amazing. He's up there with the most exciting 10s in the league.

"I don't think it's ever going to be easy to change from 15 to 10. He played a bit when he was younger, but the way he adapted and how quickly, he did a great job for us."

LEW JUST CAN'T BEAT A RED BULL

LEWIS HAMILTON fears he will end the season without a single victory for the first time in his F1 career as Max Verstappen is "almost unbeatable".

Verstappen could clinch a second world title at the next round in Singapore on October 2 after taking the 11th win of his title defence in Italy.

Hamilton started 19th and finished fifth in Monza but the seven-time world champion said: "We have to be realistic. That Red Bull is almost unbeatable. It's going to take some real doing to beat that car.

"Performance-wise we've not caught them and don't have upgrades coming to overtake them. So it's going to take some fortune going our way to win."

IT'S SCARY HOW GOOD WE CAN BE

BEN STOKES wrapped up a sixth impressive win of the summer at the Oval and can't wait to unleash his 'scary' England stars on the Aussies.

Zak Crawley's 69 not out saw England to a nine-wicket win over South Africa in just 5.3 overs on the final morning.

With a 2-1 series win and the Basil D'Oliveira trophy tucked under his arm, it was hard not to think about what a similar result could mean next July with the Ashes on the line.

And even though Stokes will have his full focus on Pakistan and New Zealand over the winter, the sting of losing the Ashes 4-0 at the start of this year is still raw, and the new skipper wants to make amends.

Stokes said: "When you know you have an Ashes coming up very soon it's hard not to look at it, especially with how the last Ashes trip went.

"I'm excited by the Ashes next summer, especially the way we're playing. We know how good Australia are but we've got to concentrate on Pakistan first and foremost, and then look to plan for Australia.

"Who knows how far we can take this side over the next couple of years. It's scary to think where things could go."

I WON'T WATCH ANOTHER SON DIE

Eubank threatens to KO Benn fight

BY CHRIS McKENNA

CHRIS EUBANK is threatening to pull his son out of the clash with Conor Benn.

Eubank Jr, 32, is set to meet Benn on October 8 in London in a battle between the sons of two British boxing legends.

The fight is set for a 157lb catchweight contest, 3lb lighter than Eubank has tipped the scales in his entire career.

Despite, Eubank Sr's claims, the O2 fight is not off and sources have indicated that his son is training as normal in preparation for the bout.

But the former two-weight world champion wants his son pulled out because of the weight.

There is also a rehydration clause that means Eubank Jr cannot put on more than a set amount between Friday's weigh-in and a check weigh-in on Saturday morning at 11am. That is believed to be less than 10lbs and Eubank Sr, whose son Sebastian died last year after he suffered a heart attack while swimming in Dubai, said: "My son's life cannot be put in danger.

"I've already lost one. It can't happen again. If you have a child and someone is trying to actually take that child away from you, and do something wrong to that child, as a dad you wouldn't let them. That's all I'm doing.

"I've given him my direction. If he doesn't want to follow it he will be dragged along.

"But he will do what is right for him. He is coming down 1oz below 160lbs which cannot happen on my watch.

"This is modern-day 'gladiating', this is not a plaything for the audience.

"We have to be strict otherwise lives are put in danger and my son's life cannot be put in danger. I've already lost one. It can't happen again."

Eubank Jr wants his dad to be in his corner for the fight but that now looks unlikely to happen unless there is a major change.

Arum: Joshua fears Fury

TYSON FURY'S US promoter Bob Arum has warned Anthony Joshua he faces a "massacre" if he accepts the challenge of the all-British clash.

WBC heavyweight world champion Fury announced his retirement after beating Dillian Whyte in April, but has reversed that decision numerous times and has since called out AJ for the showcase bout.

The offer of the fight had been accepted by Joshua's camp but not the proposed November 12 date.

But Arum said: "I don't think it's gonna happen. While Fury would want it to happen, I put myself in the shoes of Eddie Hearn and Joshua.

"After losing twice to Oleksandr Usyk, you want to get him back in with two fights that restore his confidence. If he goes back in the ring now with Fury, it's gonna be a massacre."

POTTER: MY MAGIC SPELL

POTT LUCK New Chelsea gaffer Graham checks in and is paraded by his bosses, above

Graham's gunning to get off to a flier in Chelsea hotseat

GRAHAM POTTER insists he's determined to write his own piece of Chelsea history after promising to compete for trophies.

The 47-year-old will take charge of his first Blues game against Red Bull Salzburg tomorrow night after his "whirlwind" arrival at Stamford Bridge.

Birmingham-born Potter, who has signed a five-year deal worth in excess of £50million is a major departure from some of the big names like Jose Mourinho or Thomas Tuchel.

But Potter has no doubt that he can be successful in his own way and bring a new era of success to the club as he spoke ambitiously about the future.

Potter said: "The history of the club speaks for itself but it's about trying to create that again, in our own way.

"It's an amazing history, fantastic tradition, a historic football club. You only have to walk around the place here and you see the pictures, trophies, names. It's incredible and it's a huge honour for me to be part of that now.

"It's about creating a team that competes, that has respect, for each other, that is honest, that works together, so a combination of football and human values that we try to work with.

"It's nice to be able to take the next step and to be able to work with an exciting group of players that we have here and compete at the top, try and create a winning team.

"It's the start of a really exciting period. I was really excited and impressed by the new ownership, firstly as people and then the vision for the club and what they wanted to do."

Chelsea co-owners Todd Boehly and Behdad Eghbali went for Potter because they saw him as a risk taker, innovative and a strong leader.

But it must still be seen as something of a gamble because they have gone from a big name in Tuchel to a manager who even laughed at his own first name for not being very sexy.

Potter did spell out his approach to man-management and being able to handle big egos in the dressing room but also called on Chelsea fans to keep getting behind the team to maintain Stamford Bridge's strong atmosphere.

He said: "I try to find some common ground, try to build relationships, to try to communicate effectively on a daily basis and build respect, trust and honesty, so my starting point would always be the person first. You have to understand that they're human beings first, and the key thing is to try to understand them, understand what motivates them and understand what they're like as people.

"Chelsea is a really tough place to play so I'm looking forward to being on the other end of that and getting that support with the team because it's amazing. The atmosphere is fantastic and it's something I'm really to.

"It's one of those places that fills you with incredible excitement when you come as an away team.

"The crowd are always very passionate, they're always getting behind the home side."

> It's about creating a team that competes, that has respect
> GRAHAM POTTER OUTLINES HIS VISION

Potter admits that he has taken risks in his career – such as moving to Ostersunds in Sweden – but it has improved him as a coach and a person.

He added: "In order to get better, you have to take a little step outside of what's comfortable and our job as coaches is to provide the players that opportunity to do that.

"Everybody wants to improve, to compete. Life is about taking risks, it's about doing something that's a bit outside of what you're comfortable with because then it allows you to grow and develop."

name his squad this morning for the matches at home to Ukraine and the Republic of Ireland and then away to Ukraine.

But left-back Robertson is unlikely to be involved after Liverpool manager Jurgen Klopp revealed that he expects the 28-year-old to be out until after the international break as a result of a knee issue that flared up at the end of last week's Champions League defeat away to Napoli.

Speaking at his media briefing ahead of thee Champions League match at home to Ajax tonight, the Reds boss said: "Robbo now is not 100 per cent.

"He felt something very late, 93rd or whatever minute. Actually, he felt it the next day. But yeah, he is out for at least until after the international break."

It's thrown a spanner in the works for Clarke ahead of three fixtures against two sides who have already defeated Scotland this year, with Ukraine having won 3-1 at Hampden in a World Cup play-off in June before the Irish crushed the Scots 3-0 in Dublin.

Clarke already had issues to ponder in his defence with Rangers centre-back John Souttar and Leeds captain Liam Cooper having played only 67 minutes and 45 minutes this season respectively.

In addition, Sunderland striker Ross Stewart is unavailable to Clarke after sustaining a thigh injury in the warm-up prior to last week's Championship clash with Middlesbrough.

Lawless is overjoyed at selfless Jags fans

BY ALAN ROBERTSON

STEVEN LAWLESS' energy on the pitch has been recognised by Partick Thistle fans but it's their efforts to cover the cost off it that has his admiration.

The 31-year-old attacker yesterday collected Jags' Player of the Month award for August – as voted for by supporters – with the club having lost just one of their first 11 games.

While the squad have racked up points, a fan-led initiative has been racking up pounds in a fundraising drive to help the local community cope with skyrocketing energy bills.

Launched last week, the Jags For Good Energy Fund has already raised £6000, with the men's and women's teams at Firhill jointly donating £500.

Lawless, in his second spell in Maryhill, said: "Hats off to everybody who took part in setting that up, going out their way to put the extra effort in.

"It's not a situation we should find ourselves in but it is good to see people going out their way to raise funds to help those who need them most.

"If we can help in any way with making people feel good because we're kicking a ball then that's obviously good as well.

"But some things are bigger than football."

Raith teen has to Bow out of game

RAITH have announced that teenage keeper Kyle Bow has been forced to retire due to injury.

The 18-year-old joined Rovers in January 2020 after impressing then manager John McGlynn.

But the youngster failed to make a top-team appearance and was farmed out to Hillfield Swits on loan.

Bow has taken the decision to leave Rovers due to a persistent knee problem.

YOUR NEW VOICE OF THE JAMBOS EVERY WEEK IN RECORD SPORT

RYAN STEVENSON

Advances in Europe can wait.. Hearts must fight on the home front

BACK TO REALITY Connor Smith and Josh Ginnelly after 4-0 defeat by Basaksehir

HEARTS fans may not thank me for saying this but Europe this season is a free hit.

Great days abroad, brilliant trips to Riga, Florence and Istanbul for the Jambos on tour.

Genuinely, these are games to be enjoyed and it's the chance for the club to start building an appreciation and learning about football on the continent. It was never going to be as easy as just turning up against these sides and excelling.

This season it's about building, coping with the demands of travelling and all of the logistical stuff that goes with being in a group against clubs from across the continent.

It's another Europa Conference League night on Thursday against Riga but one eye should be already focused on facing Motherwell at Fir Park on Sunday.

I'm not that fussed about the result in Riga and elsewhere, the same can't be said about the league games.

It's the flip side of the coin for the club and they can't afford to allow things to slip.

Hearts sit on the borderline for how this campaign is about to pan out domestically.

One win in their last seven games isn't a good look but they are still sitting level on points beside Aberdeen and Motherwell in joint third.

NO ALARM BELLS But Neilson can't let league slip

One eye should already be Well focused on Sunday's game alarm bells just yet. Europe is the icing on the cake, it's the bread and butter of the Premiership which they need to be 100 per cent focused on.

If they aren't bang at it, then Hearts will find themselves sliding down the table and by Christmas they could be fifth, sixth or worse and then it will become so hard to rectify the situation.

I know how difficult it is when you are trying to claw things back going into the turn of the year.

Make no mistake, the league will always be the biggest and most important thing for the club. You see so many clubs that do superbly to get themselves into Europe and then their league form goes to pot.

Hearts can't allow that to happen as they need to be in Europe again next season and make it a season on season thing where they can grow and learn along the way.

Finishing third this campaign is the be-all and end-all for Hearts, they can't afford to finish mid-table and be content with resting on a third-place finish last season.

If they want to make strides and improve year on year then another third place season is imperative.

What some people don't really appreciate is that every team at this group-stage level in Europe is going to be decent.

When the draw was made there was a sense it was a chance for Robbie Neilson and his players to get a few big results.

I spoke to a few fans about the group and they fancied Hearts to do something but last Thursday was a sobering jolt back to reality. We're all guilty of being flippant about clubs and players that aren't household figures to us.

> "Finishing third is the be-all and end-all – Hearts can't afford to end up in mid table

Names such as Stefano Okaka, Bertrand Traore and Danijel Aleksic don't spring to your mind when they are mentioned – but they are top talents and they showed that at Tynecastle.

Istanbul Basaksehir may not be in the elite bracket of the European game but they are an excellent side with players who have played at the highest level and with some top clubs.

Many of them are seasoned internationals and with some top nations at that.

Speaking of which, what a coup for Hearts to land my old mate Robert Snodgrass.

A role model for me and for everyone at the club he's now joined, he will be a superb addition.

Robert was at Stirling Albion and then Ayr United when I was playing down the leagues and he's gone on to have an amazing career.

When I'm in his company I just sit and listen to his stories.

He's an incredible person and he'll bring so much to the club both on and off the park.

HAMSTRING INJURY Halkett

Forrest and Halkett in fitness race

BY FRASER WILSON

CRAIG HALKETT and Alan Forrest are major injury doubts for Hearts ahead of Thursday's Europa Conference League clash with RFS in Latvia.

The duo are rated touch-and-go by Robbie Neilson with the Jambos due to fly out to Riga on Wednesday.

Halkett hasn't featured since hobbling off after just six minutes of the Europa League play-off defeat to Zurich on August 18 with a hamstring injury.

Forrest is struggling with a foot knock and both players will be assessed by the club's medical team over the next 24 hours.

Hearts – already without long-term absentees Liam Boyce, Kye Rowles and Beni Baningime – are seeking their first points after the thrashing at home to Istanbul Baseksehir.

But RFS served notice of their form again last night when they demolished Spartaks Jurmala 3-0 in Riga to move level second in the Latvian top flight.

Neilson said: "Halkett will be touch-and-go again. He is training a bit with us so we'll build it up a bit and then see where he is with it.

"He had a wee issue and came back, then it flared up again. We need to take our time but I'm hopeful we can get him for Thursday, at least some game time.

"Alan is in the same position. He had a problem with his foot so we'll wait and see how he is."

Zurich fined for Gordon missile

FC ZURICH have been fined €10,000 (£8660) by UEFA after Hearts keeper Craig Gordon was struck by an object thrown by an away fan in the recent Europa League clash.

UEFA's Control, Ethics and Disciplinary body also hit the Swiss side with a €11,250 (£9744) penalty for 'lighting fireworks' and were warned over a 'lack of discipline of supporters'.

At the time of the incident Gordon said: "There was absolutely no excuse for it."

I'M IN GREAT NICK

Monty and Lucas got Miller into top flight

MARINER MAN Montgomery was Miller's gaffer Down Under

LEWIS LAUDS LUCAS Miller hailed the influence of Oz hero Neill, below

BY FRASER WILSON

LEWIS MILLER will always hold hard-tackling Socceroos legend Lucas Neill as his footballing role model.

And considering both players came through the ranks at a Sydney-based club called Manly United, perhaps their fondness for the physical side of the game should be no surprise.

But while former West Ham and Blackburn ace Neill was the Hibs defender's top idol, it's a player with Sheffield steel mixed with Scottish blood flowing through his veins who gave him the strength to try mixing it in Europe.

Miller reckons the day former Scotland Under-21 international and Sheffield United hero Nick Montgomery took on the top job at Central Coast Mariners was the moment his own career powered on to a new level.

As a teenager he had made his A-League breakthrough under Alen Stajcic.

But it was Montgomery's faith and guidance after moving into the top job last season, following a spell coaching in the club's academy, which made Miller a standout.

Those performances caught the eye of Hibs scouts and after binning a move to Macarthur FC in favour of joining the Lee Johnson revolution in Leith in the summer, Miller admits he owes a debt of gratitude to his former boss.

He said: "Nick was at Sheffield United and was a legend there as well.

"When he took the job at Mariners I knew I was going to be in for a good season because he was with me in the academy and he always believed in me and trusted me.

"The second he got that gig I started playing more games, I was more consistent and just getting better and better under his influence.

"To play under someone with his experience, you look up to him and listen to what he has to say."

Miller has had to be patient in his bid to become first choice right back at Easter Road with Chris Cadden the preferred option on the right so far.

The 22-year-old has had to settle for two sub appearances in the top flight after starting two League Cup games in July.

He encountered Johnson's wrath in last month's defeat at St Mirren with the manager branding him "naive" for not being ready to go on as a sub as the clock ticked down.

But Miller insists he is more than ready to fight for his place in the starting line-up with a determination born from his early days watching 96-times capped Socceroo ace Neill.

He said: "I first started at Manly United and they have the Lucas Neill Stadium. He's obviously an Australian legend.

"He was a hard tackler, always gave it 110 per cent and I used to be a centre-back so transitioning from centre-back to right-back, I still looked up to a player like that.

"If I can be half the player he was, I'll be on the right path.

"His dad runs a few tournaments in that area, he came through the youth teams at Manly. There's a Lucas Neill Award at the end of the season.

"Unfortunately I wasn't good enough to win it at the time. But he was a top player in terms of attitude and leadership – he had it all."

Miller is one of eight Aussies currently playing in the Scottish top flight.

And he reckons moving to Edinburgh was crucial if he wanted to take his game into the next level.

He said: "It's always been football for me. I haven't done anything else since I started as a 12-year-old.

"I just started getting better and better and luckily I got the European move. Sydney, where I grew up, is a good place for football. But if you want to improve, you can't sit still."

Record Sport understands top-flight sides are discussing their own plans but clashes including Rangers' home encounter with Dundee United and Celtic's trip to Paisley to face St Mirren are all on.

In another twist, English sources state there will be no playing of the Champions League anthem in Britain this week, with Rangers set to host Napoli on Wednesday night.

An SFA representative said: "Following confirmation of the postponement of all fixtures in the professional game across Scotland last weekend as a mark of respect for the passing of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, we can confirm the intention for the professional game to resume.

"Fixtures will go ahead, subject to Police Scotland resourcing, while any fixtures under the professional banner be rescheduled if they fall on Monday, September 19, the day of Her Majesty's funeral.

"This week, as a mark of respect and in keeping with the period of national mourning, home clubs may wish to hold a period of silence and/or play the national anthem just ahead of kick-off, and players may wish to wear black armbands."

This week's European ties will also go ahead – although Rangers have already been forced to move their Champions League tie with Napoli back 24 hours.

Ange Postecoglou will see his Celtic side's clash with Shakhtar Donetsk unaffected, along with Hearts' trip to Latvia in the Europa League.

English football will also resume this weekend although Arsenal's Europa League tie against PSV in London on Thursday has been postponed due to concerns over policing.

Clubs confirmed the changes are part of a drive to find new ways to boost attendances.

All three were among the group who commissioned the Deloitte independent review into the SPFL late last year in a bid to revamp the game and bring in extra cash.

Hibs' fixture with the Perth Saints, scheduled for Saturday, October 22, has now been brought forward to 7.30pm on the previous evening.

Prices have also been slashed to £10 and £5 for concessions in a bid to fill the ground.

Friday night matches have been a regular feature in the Championship for the past two years as part of the BBC's deal with the second tier.

A Hibs spokesman said: "We have reduced ticket prices in the hope of creating a special atmosphere under the lights at Easter Road."

Aberdeen travel down the A90 to face Dundee United on Saturday, October 8, with the original 3pm kick-off time now moved back to 6pm.

The return match at Pittodrie on Saturday, November 12, has also been moved to 6pm.

Dons commercial director Rob Wicks, said: "We are excited to try this kick-off time for a home match as we look to improve atmosphere."

Kop fans don't need advice on how to pay respect to the Queen

WATCH YOUR MOUTH Klopp has full faith in respect being shown by Reds supporters

JURGEN KLOPP has insisted Liverpool fans don't need "advice on showing respect".

Reds supporters have been subjected to some serious abuse over the weekend, with rival fans taking to social media to suggest THEY were to blame for the surprising FA decision to postpone ALL football following the death of the Queen.

That included matches at kids' level, but that didn't stop Anfield punters being singled out, with the suggestion they would have booed the national anthem when asked to pay respects to the monarchy.

Liverpool fans were criticised during the FA Cup final for booing the national anthem, and Prince William, who attended the Wembley showpiece.

There is likely to be a minute's silence before tonight's Champions League tie with Ajax at Anfield to mark the monarch's passing.

But Klopp dismissed the notion his club's supporters need any lectures on how to behave.

The German said: "It's the right thing to do but I don't think our people need any kind of advice from me for showing respect. There are plenty of examples where people showed exactly the right respect.

"One which surprised me, and I was really proud of that moment, was last season when we played Manchester United around a very sad situation with Cristiano Ronaldo's family. That's what I expect. It's clear that's what we have to do. That's it."

Klopp spoke with warmth about the longest serving Monarch in British history, and suggested that the people who have felt a deep sense of loss at her passing should be respected.

He said: "As far as I know, I don't know her, but the things you see where she was a really warm, nice, loved lady and that is all that I need to know. Because of my personal experience not too long ago... it's obviously not about what I think but what people who are much closer to her feel.

"And I respect their grief a lot and that is why I will show my respect with the minute's silence if it goes through."

UEFA will make the final call on the minute's silence, and it is likely it will be held for all European games played in the UK this week.

Klopp will miss Andy Robertson for the visit of the Dutch side with the left-back ruled out with a suspected knee injury.

And the 28-year-old Scotland skipper is also out of key Nations League games against Ukraine and the Republic of Ireland.

Klopp said: "I don't expect him to go on international duty. The expected return date is in October."

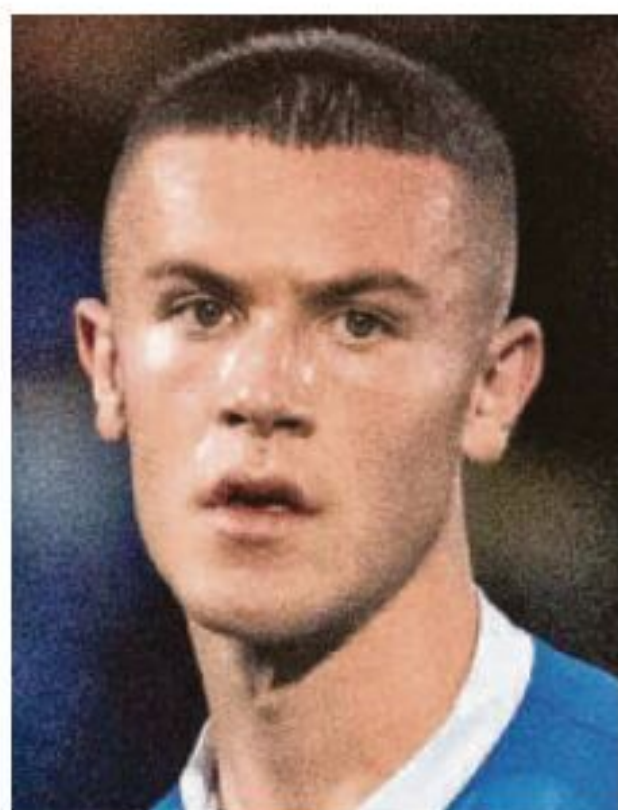
TONIGHT, 5.45PM, BT SPORT 4

ANTONIO CONTE admits the postponement of last weekend's Premier League fixtures allowed his Spurs players to recover fully from last week's Champions League win over Marseille.

With the exception of Lucas Moura, Tottenham are ready to rumble again with two games in three days as they host Leicester on Saturday after tonight's Champions League tie against Sporting Lisbon.

Conte said: "For sure, not playing has given us the chance to recover better. When you play every two or three days it is very difficult. You need to rotate because the players need rest, otherwise you risk injuries.

"At the same time, in two or three days you need energy. But it gives us the chance to recover and be more relaxed in picking the starting 11."

Lewis pulling double duty for role in Gers' Euro dream


AJAX STRIKE MacKinnon

LEWIS MacKINNON insists he's living a dream double life playing for Rangers in the UEFA Youth League by day and supporting them in the Champions League at night.

The boyhood Gers fan netted in Amsterdam last week as David McCallum's youngsters went down 2-1 to Ajax.

He's hoping to get the nod again as Rangers Under-19s line-up against Napoli at Firhill tomorrow in matchday two of the Youth League.

Then it's back to Ibrox to support Gio van Bronckhorst's side as they bid to get their own campaign up and running against the Serie A leaders.

MacKinnon, who signed a one-year deal in May, said: "It's been brilliant, playing and getting the opportunity to play earlier in the day and then watch the first-team has been great.

"Especially as a fan you love to be at those kind of games and that's where the club wants to be – playing Champions League football. Having our first game against Ajax has given us a sniff for this kind of high-level football and encourages us to want to play more."

It may be a far cry from taking on Gretna and Dalbeattie in the Lowland League but MacKinnon said: "This kind of experience helped us grow as players. The Lowland League's a physical test but European teams bring a more technical challenge. It helps you to improve as a player."

MIDWEEK

Mr Fixit

Reds alert for Ajax in the box

THE Champions League gave us plenty of thrills last week and it'll be interesting to see how Ajax fare at Anfield tonight after battering Rangers in Amstserdam.

Just hours after the Dutch side romped to a 4-0 win, Liverpool were crushed 4-1 by Napoli and the defeat could've been even heavier.

It's now just two wins in the last seven games for Jurgen Klopp's side so I'm surprised to see them as McBookie's 1/2 hot favourites with Ajax as big as 17/4.

That's probably down to the Anfield factor and Liverpool will look to fly out of the traps, with over 1.5 first-half goals appealing at 15/13 with SportNation.

Rangers couldn't live with Mohammed Kudus last week and he's evens at Unibet just to have a shot on target.

Spurs beat Marseille last week but travel to a Sporting Lisbon side who crushed Eintracht Frankfurt in Germany. I fancy goals in this one, with over 2.5 strikes a best 10/11 with SBK and BTTS paying 7/9 at the same firm.

Bayern Munich host Barcelona as Robert Lewandowski returns to the Allianz Arena. The Pole is 11/8 (Bet365) to haunt his old club with a goal.

Bayern looked slick as they won at Inter so 17/10 at McBookie for a home win with BTTS is tempting. Elsewhere, I'm doubling wins for Marseille and Inter, with that bet paying a best 185/100 at SBK.

Super singles: Kudus shot on target (Evs, Unibet). Lewandowski to score (11/8, Bet365).

BET BUILDER

Combining BTTS with over 2.5 goals in Lisbon pays 113/100.

» SPORTS VIEW TUESDAY

Craig Swan

ANGE POSTECOGLOU has spent the past 15 months building it up.

Now with a settled squad and the challenge more Real-istic it is time for more detailed judgments in Europe.

Postecoglou and his team were quite correctly placed under no pressure to deliver when going into continental competition last season.

There isn't a manager in the world who could have inherited the shambles he did and got through the Champions League qualifiers. Failure at the first hurdle to Midtjylland was no fault of the Aussie.

He managed to steer his team beyond Jablonec and AZ Alkmaar to gain entry to the group stage of the Europa League and there were encouraging signs throughout the campaign with a team that wasn't properly built or gelled.

Celtic didn't get through their section but three wins from six was not a bad return. It offered signs of progress and landed them a post-Christmas spot in the Conference.

It's personal choice how the 5-1 aggregate defeat to Bodo/Glimt at the start of this year is viewed. It is fair to suggest the Premiership title race and the opportunity to gain automatic entry to these group stage in the Champions League was the main motivation for Celtic at the time of that double-header.

That was fairly evident when the teamsheets for the second leg in Norway were handed out with a host of regulars left out.

Doubters will, perhaps with justification, point to the fact that choice only came following a 3-1 defeat for the first-pick line-up in the opening leg.

Domestic bliss made that exit irrelevant by May with this assault on the premier competition becoming the fixation. Yet even going into it there was something of a freeling of a free hit for Postecoglou's team on night one.

Of course they didn't think that way. They went in believing they could do something against Real Madrid and it is to their credit they made such a contest of it for a spell against the champions of Europe.

Celtic's performance for over half that game meant that although the home tie was lost 3-0, there was little other than platitudes handed out afterwards to Postecoglou and his team. Again, that's fair enough. No club has won this competition more than Real.

They have nailed it five of the last nine years and are experts at doing what they did in Glasgow – staying in games while the opposition are having a right go at them then finding a way to stylishly pick them off and win.

Outside of Celtic Park defeat to Real was deemed almost inevitable but that's not the case in Warsaw tomorrow night. Now, rightly or wrongly, there feels a certain degree of expectation around the travelling group.

Sure, Celtic are still learning on the job and it is going to be a while before this current group gains the proper experience of operating in the elite competition.

But this is not Real and this is a more accurate situation on which to judge the progress of Postecoglou's team.

Shakhtar Donetsk are no mugs. They are playing for their country and have an excellent group of young players thrown together by FIFA rules which permitted the club's foreign stars to leave under-siege Ukraine and find new homes.

If anyone was in any doubt about their ability to perform, while Celtic were scrapping it out against Real Madrid, Shakhtar were taking RB Leipzig apart at the same time on their own patch.

The 4-1 scoreline was a result that reverberated around the continent.

But Shakhtar are on the road again. The Russian invasion of Ukraine means they have to play their so-called home matches in Poland. Essentially it's a neutral venue.

Postecoglou wants to make steps with Celtic. He wants them to compete at this level on a regular basis.

Tomorrow night the supporters should get a clearer view of where, in European terms, the team is placed at this stage of their development under their Aussie gaffer.

Lambert: Lew can do what Henrik did to us

BY PHIL GORDON

THE return of Robert Lewandowski to Bayern Munich tonight with Barcelona might have seemed like a Champions League dream for TV execs.

But for the club dubbed 'FC Hollywood', it could turn into a nightmare if the Polish hitman copies what Henrik Larsson did to Celtic 18 years ago.

Every one of the 75,000 people inside the Allianz Arena will be watching Lewandowski with his new colours, claret and blue stripes, just like Larsson at Celtic Park in September 14, 2004 on the opening night of the group stage. The Swede showed no mercy to his old fans, or team-mates.

Larsson scored for Barca in a 3-1 win.

And former Celtic captain, Paul Lambert, has told German magazine Kicker that Lewandowski could do the same for his new Spanish employers.

The 53-year-old former Scotland captain said: "Henrik scoring in that game, not just in front of his old fans but his friends, just showed what a professional he was. Robert had been at Bayern for so long, like Henrik at Celtic, and I am sure Bayern will miss his goals. And Barca will gain from those goals."

And the Hoops keeper, beaten by Real's Vinicius Junior, Luka Modric and Eden Hazard, said: "We're not going to base our confidence on one game, we're confident in what we do and we believe in it.

"We want to give the best account of ourselves every time we show up, that's what is asked of us.

"We believe because of what we've been building and what we've been doing every day.

"We had sensational support against Real. It wasn't to be but we've just got to move forward.

"That's kind of what they do, don't they? They win Champions Leagues like that.

"Credit to them, they are an exceptional, world-class team but we're just trying to stay in our lane and keep on running. We do believe in what we do. We've a superb manager, we're all on the same team and we are ready to go, we are ready to push.

"Going away to places like Ross County, Kilmarnock, that is what gives me fire.

"This club is a special club when it comes to the support, so it doesn't need occasions like that [Madrid] for you to feel like you need to give back.

"I feel like as soon as I put this shirt on, I'm in a pretty special place.

ROGIC: I DIDN'T WANT TO RUSH

WEST BROM recruit Tom Rogic needed "time to reflect" after leaving Celtic at the end of the title-winning Premiership term.

The Aussie playmaker has been a free agent since bowing out after a trophy-laden spell of almost 10 years with the Hoops.

Many expected the midfielder, 29, to have a move lined up having impressed under Ange Postecoglou last season but Rogic remained a free agent as he knocked back interest from Indonesia and the A-League.

Socceroos boss Graham Arnold also warned Rogic he was risking his spot in Australia's World Cup squad in the run up to Qatar 2022.

But the Celtic hero put an end to speculation over his future by penning at one-year deal at the Hawthorns as he looks to help Steve Bruce's side climb the Championship table after just one win from eight games.

Rogic added that it was his choice to leave the Scottish champions and he told the West Brom website: "I was looking for a change of scenery and a fresh challenge.

"I didn't just want to rush into anything. It was important to take my time and make sure my next club was the right club.

"I had some time to reflect and now feel refreshed, re-energised and excited about the future. I'm looking forward to getting started.

"The team hasn't got the results their performances have warranted so far. I know the manager and the boys are looking to change that as quickly as possible."

SHAKH RATTLED & ROLLED

TOM BOYD reckons rocking Real Madrid was an even better display than beating Barcelona as he backed Ange Postecoglou to stick to his swashbuckling style.

Boyd calls on Postecoglou to continue with the attacking style that saw Celts give Madrid scare

BY MICHAEL GANNON

The former Hoops hero is fully on board with Angeball and he is convinced Champions League rivals Shakhtar Donetsk and RB Leipzig will struggle to live with Celts if they go gung-ho like they did against Los Blancos.

Postecoglou's men eventually came up short against the Spanish giants but Boyd believes the Parkhead boss should stick to his guns as they hit the road in the next two games.

And he's convinced the all-out attack Madrid masterplan will thrill fans – and get results.

Celts take on Ukrainian outfit Shakhtar in their temporary Warsaw home tomorrow night and former title-winning Hoops skipper Boyd said: "We played better in an attacking sense against the European champions than we did when we beat Barca here all those years ago.

"It is about taking your opportunities when they come along and you have to be clinical in that aspect, which Celtic have been for most of this campaign.

"It was a no-lose situation against Real Madrid. They put in a good performance and kept the feel-good factor going.

"The impact Ange has had and the addition of good players coming in is hopefully a recipe for success and that has been the case so far. It has been great to watch. If this is it at its peak then, I tell you what, every Celtic supporter will be happy."

Boyd believes the rest of Group F will have taken notice of Celtic's intent – but they might struggle to cope.

He said: "Judging on the performance, I wouldn't imagine Shakhtar and Leipzig would be able to come and defend with the way Celtic like to attack.

"I don't imagine he will change his philosophy in terms of the way he wants to play. I wouldn't imagine those clubs will be as good defensively as Real Madrid.

"We will wait and see how that develops. But there could be a chance. It is still difficult. We now have two away games and that's a hard start to the campaign.

"We've played the European champions first and then we have two away games. It is a very difficult start."

Postecoglou makes no apologies about his attacking ideology.

Some bosses might be tempted to park the bus when coming up against the European juggernauts but the Aussie prefers to fight fire with fire.

Boyd is on board. He'd rather watch a Celtic side having a go and if it doesn't come off then at least they will have gone down

ONE DAY TO GO

NOT ABAD NIGHT Liel went agonisingly close against Real as Hoops gave the giants a game swinging. He said: "It's about being brave enough to go and do that. We have tried it so many times by going and just sitting in and defending and that has not worked. So why not go and have a go? Goals change games.

"Had we scored against Real Madrid it might have given us something, a wee cushion, and we might have gone on to get another outstanding victory. But it didn't happen.

"But going to these sort of places it is worth having a go and testing these other teams."

Boyd is going to enjoy the European thrill ride but it's the league title that remains the goal.

Getting out of the Champions League group – either to the knockout stages or the Europa League – would be some achievement this early in the manager's Parkhead project.

Boyd said: "Europe is a bonus isn't it? The rewards of what you've done in the league campaign. But the league is still the priority.

"What we want to do is get back to getting performances and getting the crowd behind us. We have lost our way a wee bit in terms of some of the results we had here when it was a fortress many years ago. I am sure that is what we want to try and get back to.

"We have got a couple of difficult away games coming up. We will see what it is like when Donetsk and Leipzig come back here again."

Celtic will be well rested for Warsaw tomorrow after the SPFL's shutdown at the weekend.

Carl Starfelt won't make it but a few extra days recovery won't have done any harm to Kyogo Furuhashi's busted shoulder, suffered in the opening seconds of the thumping Rangers win the other week.

Boyd believes Postecoglou has plenty of options though with Gio Giakoumakis proving to be a supreme stand in.

He said: "The manager has the luxury of two in-form strikers. Kyogo seems to be the No.1 choice. But we know the styles of both players, Kyogo's a bit sharper but Giakoumakis is also a serious goalscorer.

"It's up to the rest of the players around them to supply them."

● Tom Boyd was speaking at the launch of the Wim Jansen book 'Mastermind'. Wim was Celtic manager in season 1997/98 and won the league title to stop Rangers' 10-in-a-row bid. Wim passed away in January of this year.

Politician's fury at fans call by UEFA

BY ALAN MARSHALL

ITALIAN politician Luigi Musto has demanded UEFA reinstate the travel and accommodation costs of both Rangers and Napoli supporters after away fans were banned from both Champions League games.

European football's governing body decided to reschedule the second game in the group stages from tonight to tomorrow because of Scottish policing issues.

Napoli were due to have around 600 fans at Ibrox for the tie and Rangers would have expected to bring a few thousand followers to Italy for the return game next month.

But UEFA banned away fans from Ibrox and also decided in the interests of 'sporting integrity' that no Rangers fans will receive briefs for the match at the Stadio Diego Armando Maradona.

Now Naples city politician Musto, whose constituency represents Napoli's ground, has urged UEFA to compensate both sets of fans for their decision.

He said: "I have expressed my total disdain over this decision. Hundreds of Napoli fans have already bought flights, hotels and tickets for the match in Glasgow.

"I can understand the decision to move the game 24 hours given the public order reasons stated by the local police forces in Scotland.

"But why would they close the away end? It's totally unacceptable.

"Supporters should not have to pay for these idiotic decisions.

"Napoli have already said they will refund tickets but that is just a small proportion of the costs to supporters. Who will pay for the cancelled flights? The British government? UEFA?

"And the Scots have the same problem for the game in Naples – a decision disguised as being at a 'level playing field.' It's an absurd decision and a disgraceful one.

"I've been inundated with requests. The fans are rightly furious. I will always defend the people of this city and I hope Napoli demand UEFA compensate the fans."

MyGers charge up to £71 for brief

ONE brief for Rangers' first home Champions League fixture in 12 years have been priced up to £71 for non-season-ticket holders.

The briefs for tomorrow's Group A showdown with Napoli went on sale to fans in the MyGers membership scheme.

Top end three-match packages for season-ticket holders cost £180 but the £71 for a single match ticket has prompted an angry reaction. On social media one fan wrote: "Rangers charging MyGers members £71 for a game against Napoli is appalling."

Russell recalls pain of Dons defeats as he backs GVB's boys

BY FRASER WILSON

BOBBY RUSSELL was part of the last Rangers squad to lose four goals in two games on the bounce.

That was 40 years ago against an Aberdeen side that would go on to conquer Europe 12 months later.

John Greig's team had to stew on that double Dons drubbing for an entire summer after their final league game of the 1981-82 season ended in a 4-0 Pittodrie thumping followed by a 4-1 Scottish Cup Final defeat after extra time.

But after a summer of soul-searching they bounced back by going 17 games unbeaten at the start of the next campaign.

Russell reckons the current squad are lucky they only have to wait a matter of days for the chance to get their Old Firm and Amsterdam misery out their system.

And while some in light blue might be living in fear of another horror show when Napoli come to town Russell thinks the exact opposite.

The 65-year-old is confident they can get a result and grab a foothold on a Champions League campaign threatening to slide off the chart before it's barely begun.

Gio van Bronckhorst's claim that Rangers can't compete at that level was controversial and doesn't wash with Russell, who insists club legend Greig would be reacting to two heavy defeats with actions rather than words.

He said: "I didn't see Gio van

Bronckhorst's comments but they seem a bit strange. Sometimes managers don't quite get their message over the way they mean and I hope that's the case here.

"I played under Greig and Jock Wallace and I can't imagine them ever suggesting their teams couldn't compete at any level.

"What would they have done? They'd have made changes. The other night the only change was Scott Wright in for Steven Davis.

"You've got two games where they have conceded eight goals so there's got to be changes now.

"Where those changes come I'm not sure. I'll leave that to the manager, I don't get paid for those kind of decisions!

"But if you lose eight goals in two games then there has to be changes. Napoli at Ibrox is a great opportunity, that's the only way to look at it.

"One thing's for sure, there'll be absolutely no hiding place for the players in that tie.

"These are the games you look forward to. This is what Rangers have been striving for in recent years. I know Napoli got that great result against Liverpool in Italy but if Rangers up their level and stop giving silly goals away then they can get a result in front of their own supporters.

"I truly believe that, then they can start to put the past week behind them."

Russell needs a bit of reminding about the back-to-back Dons hosings in 1982.

It's not the type of memory the midfield maestro likes to bank but he's right in that his part in the humblings was limited.

Russell sat out the Pittodrie encounter to ensure he was fit for the final a week later. Even then the extra time defeat wasn't quite the embarassment GVB's men have suffered in the last nine days.

He said: "I missed the first game at Pittodrie through injury but was back for the cup final and, to be honest, that was a marked improvement on the week before.

"On our day could beat anyone. We had Davie Cooper, Jim Bett, Sandy Jardine, real quality. We could compete with anyone at our best but we were inconsistent and lost silly games.

"It was a long summer but we knew we had to come back strongly and that's exactly what we did. We went a lengthy spell unbeaten at the start of the next campaign, playing some great stuff.

"We won up at Pittodrie and beat Borussia Dortmund over two legs in the UEFA Cup before capitulating away to Cologne.

"We'd already beaten the Germans 2-1 at Ibrox and it could have been four or five. But then they hammered us 5-0 in the return. That's what can happen in Europe.

"They were playing mind games ahead of the return. We went out to practice on their park the night before the game and they turned the floodlights off on us!

"I don't think you'd get away with that now but Rangers can make it uncomfortable for Napoli – I'm sure of it."

MICHAEL GANNON ANSWERS YOUR CALLS

SCOTTISH football fans were clearly missing their fix over the weekend as the national game paused in respect for the late Queen.

But not everyone agreed with the move and they are hoping to get back to business this weekend.

Not long after the calls, their wish was granted by Scottish football bosses. William Hutchison, Aberdeen, said: "I'm glad there's a full football card this week and weekend. We all need a break from what's been happening and to postpone the football again would have been ludicrous. I am sure every club will have a minute's silence."

Alan McPherson, Cullen Moray, said: "It was a terrible decision to postpone football because of the death of the Queen. I could go to the cinema, theatre or a restaurant so why not a football match? A minute's silence would have been quite sufficient and give fans a chance to express their condolences.

"Many fans have spent money planning to attend games at a time when money is tight and they will have to do it again when the games are played on a cold night in November."

Kenny Goff, via email, said: "Why did all football need to be cancelled? Why not play the games and have all teams wear black armbands and to have a two-minute silence as they did elsewhere? Golf, rugby and horse racing all went ahead."

Meanwhile, Paul McArdle, Gourock, said: "There have been two Coronation Cups in history. 1902 and 1953. The club that won it both times is the famous Glasgow Celtic. Will there be a third?"

There's enough trophies up for grabs right now and caller Bud Hay's title boast got Rangers fans riled up. Scott Gowers, Edinburgh, said: "Bud thinks the league will be won by Christmas. He should at least give his club until March before Rangers seal the league. Celtic are not in a familiar position of playing European football week in, week out until the end of the season which definitely has an impact on the weekend's games after, and Celtic already seem to tire after 35 to 40 minutes."

Alfie Mullin, London, said: "Bud Hay is delusional if he thinks the league will be over by Christmas. Rangers have now had this season's blip and we will be back firing on all cylinders. We'll beat Celtic in the next three meetings."

Gary Stevenson, Newtonhill, said: "You have to laugh at the Celtic supporters claiming a superb performance during their 3-0 home defeat in Europe. Just imagine if they actually get a point in their up and coming fixtures. No doubt they will be claiming it as the best results in Scottish football history."

Gers fan Robert McNab emailed: "Rangers have spent more than £10million on four players in the transfer window but only one is a regular starter. Ben Davies, Rabbi Matondo and Ridvan Yilmaz represent terrible transfer business up to this point."

Sir Rod Stewart called the Hotline yesterday to defend our teams' Euro woes. But Wullie Graham, Bristol, said: "I understand Rod's point about the difference in finance between Scottish and European teams. The same applies to the Old Firm and the rest of Scottish football. It's glory hunters like Rod flocking to watch them rather than support their local team. Rod should be a Hibs fan as his father was from Leith."

While Dr Robert S Pender emailed: "We must stop kidding ourselves as to the standard of our teams. They are at best middle English Championship level. You get what you pay for when you are spending £2m to £7m. Big investment from multi-billionaires is required urgently."

Joe: I knew we were the Real deal before show v Madrid

BELIEVER Hart says Hoops are always confident in what they do

BY CRAIG SWAN

JOE HART insists Celtic's Champions League belief is fuelled every day and not by one 90-minute battle against Real Madrid.

Ange Postecoglou's team are heading to Poland for their second Group F examination tomorrow night against Shakhtar Donetsk.

Celtic lost their opening game to Real but the level of performance during the game earned them a standing ovation from their own fans at the end of the 3-0 reverse.

The positive showing offered supporters hope that Postecoglou's team can seriously compete in the section over the

TRIBUTES Clubs to mourn Queen

BY MICHAEL GANNON

SCOTTISH football clubs have been invited to pay respect to the Queen this weekend after being given the green light to resume action.

The SPFL will resume this Saturday and Sunday following last weekend's postponements following the death of the monarch last Thursday.

And clubs will be invited to pay respects during the period of mourning in any number of ways, including holding periods of silence, wearing black armbands

Using the central letter and at least three others, how many words can you find? Plurals, proper nouns and hyphenated words are not allowed, and there is at least one nine-letter word.

Target:
9 - good;
12 - very good;
15 or more - excellent

WORD LADDER

Change one letter at a time (but not the position of any letter) to make a new word – and move from the word at the top of the box to the word at the bottom using the exact number of rungs.

F O A L

C A L F

EVENS

Insert any digit from 1 to 9 in the squares so that the numbers in each row and column add up to the given totals. No digits may be repeated within a row or column, and only even numbers may be placed in grey squares.

Row totals: 14, 20, 18, 29
